That is about all that I wanted to say. I have consistently voted against all of these raises except in the case of the President, whose salary can not be changed for the coming term unless it is done before the 4th of March. I really think that in his case, as the head of the Nation, with extraordinary ex-penses and extraordinary dignity, he should receive more sal-ary than that fixed by the present statute. In the case of the federal judges I think, in comparison with all the great officials of the Government, there are no men on the federal pay roll paid as much annually for their services as the judges whose salaries we are now considering.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggested the amendment which brought up in the first place the question of the change in the salaries of the federal judges, and in view of the trend of the discussion which has taken place I want to add just a word.

In the first place, we need hardly vie with one another here in our regard and respect for our judiciary. We all have a very high regard and a profound respect for that tribunal and for the great men who have occupied positions upon that tribunal from the time of its organization to the present time. I do not believe the general character, standing, learning, and ability at the present time are by any means lower than at any other time in the history of the bench. There have been exceptional men upon the bench in times past to whom the historians have given a peculiar place in our history, and it may seem to some improper to compare them with the present occupants. But when the present history of the country comes to be written we will find that such men as Harlan and Fuller and their associates will compare in ability and integrity and in worth with the greatest jurists who have presided over that bench at any time in its history. So we may set aside for the present the question of the present status of the bench with reference to its integrity and character and our regard for it.

I believe in their integrity. I believe in the integrity and the ability of the federal bench as a whole. I do not believe that any just insinuation can be indulged in against that tribunal. There may be rare exceptions, and there have possibly been rare exceptions, which would give rise to a possible inference at different times in the history of the bench, but as a whole and in its complete history it is one of the greatest tribunals in the history of the world, and has been presided over by the most remarkable set of men who have ever presided over any tribunal. In my opinion that is just as true at the present hour as at any other time in the history of the country.

But, Mr. President, I also believe in the profession of which I am a very humble member. I do not believe the time will ever come in the history of that profession when it will not furnish sufficient brains and integrity, sufficient ability, and sufficient patriotism to fill the places upon that great tribunal, without considering to any great extent the question of salary or the sufficiency of the emoluments.

The emoluments would never secure to us the bench which has been secured, and the only way in which it will be secured is by reason of the fact that the great legal profession will always have in it men of sufficient ability and of sufficient loyalty to the Government and with sufficient desire and design to acquire a place in the history of the country to serve upon that bench regardless of the question of emoluments. So we need not fear so far as the question of salary is concerned as to keeping up the efficiency of the bench.

I desire to say in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Washington that it does not necessarily follow that the man who is drawing fifty or one hundred thousand dollars a year as a lawyer is the most efficient and capable man to act as a jurist upon the bench. Some of the greatest men who have ever presided over our tribunals have been those who were failures, pronouncedly so, in the practice of law.

The man in the arena, in the conflict of the trial, is one individual, and he may be a powerful advocate, commanding great fees and controlling great interests, and yet in the dispensation of justice from the bench he may be to a great degree a failure. He may lack the judicial temperament. That has happened time and time again. So, Mr. President, there always have been and always will be men who will take these positions from another consideration entirely.

Mr. President, there are no judges at the present time resigning to any great extent. There is no difficulty in filling vacan-Whenever a position is vacant, there is no trouble to find a party competent, efficient, properly trained, anxious to take it.

Will any member of this body contend that by reason of modest emoluments which have been prevailing for some time the standing of the judiciary of this country has been in any wise lowered? Has the fact that for the last twenty-five years we have not been paying salaries equal to the income of great lawyers lowered the standing or the capacity or the ability of the federal bench? It simply proves, as has been suggested here so ably by the Senator from Texas, that there is a motive impelling men to take positions other than that of salary.

A republic will never be able upon the ground of moneymaking to arrange its salaries in accordance with that principle. We can not establish in this great body a rule which will compensate men in the measure of dollars and cents for their services. It is an impossible rule for a republic to adopt.

Mr. President, we have organized here at some time or other in the history of this body what the scientists have never been able to discover, and that is, politically speaking, perpetual We raise one salary. motion. When we come to discuss the question whether another salary shall be raised, we do not take into consideration the actual necessity of the raise, but we stand here in our places and argue that because one salary has been raised it is unfair to keep some other man's salary down. The result is, when the entering wedge is once made and a salary is once raised, one position is played against another until there is a constant, perpetual motion for the raise of salaries. That is the real basis of the contention of the distinguished Senator from Ohio in this argument and this very motion-that we have now established a $10,000 rate for one judge, and whether it is too high or too low, the point is that we must not discriminate, and therefore we must inquire not into the real worth of the service or the necessity of the raise, but whether some one else is drawing more than this particular individual. So we have this constant movement and perpetual motion with reference to these matters, based upon the proposition of playing one department against another, one officeholder against another, until we have always confronting us the question not what is the real amount that we should pay, but what some one else is drawing.

Mr. President, I have been opposed to the raise of these salaries from the beginning, for two reasons. In the first place, in my judgment, the raise of these salaries is in violation of the spirit of the Constitution, and it is, in my judgment, a violation of good faith on the part of the majority party in this Chamber toward the people of the United States. The Constitution provides that we shall not raise the President's salary during his term of office. We are hastening now with undue dispatch to avoid the violation of the letter of the Constitution, when we know we are violating the spirit of the Constitution in doing so. I submit that if the question of the raise of the salary of the President and of all the officers mentioned had been suggested in this Chamber last spring it would have died in the twinkling of an eye. I suggest, further, that if it had been suggested in the late campaign that we were going to raise the salary of the President, or raise the salary of the several different officers to the extent proposed, it would have been repudiated by all the candidates for President and by the chairmen of all the parties asking for the suffrages of the people. So we are not only violating the spirit of the Constitution, but we are violating what, in my judgment, is the spirit of good faith toward the people, whose approval the majority party in this Chamber asked within the last ninety days.

It is said the people are in favor of it. They have had no opportunity to pass upon it, and we are not giving them in this way an opportunity even to protect their rights, in my judgment, under the Constitution. It has been said here by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] that this is a mere bagatelle. So it is. And it has been said further, and very properly, by the Senator from Colorado, that it is nothing in comparison with some of the expenditures which are being made, and which ought to be ctopped. There is only one way in the world to stop, and that is to stop when time is called. If any other similar appropriations are being made and attention is called to them we will have the same opportunity to establish a precedent with reference to them as we have with reference to this. It is at least hardly proper to say because expenditures are being made that ought not to be made we should judge these expenditures by a comparison between the two. I do not myself believe that we should discriminate as between the circuit judges and the district judges in the sense which has been suggested, but I do believe that we ought to reconsider the question of the salaries of the circuit judges and fix it in accordance with what is proper, and fix this in accordance with what is proper, rather than to raise the circuit judges beyond a proper measure, and to measure this item in accordance with the salary we pay the circuit judges.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I am loath at this late hour of the day to say anything on this question which has been so long and so ably and so exhaustively debated, and I would not do so but for some expressions which have been made not only here in this debate, but have been continuously made whenever the question of salaries has been discussed.

I will say, at the outset, that I am opposed to the increase of any of the salaries that are increased in this bill. I believe the salary of every officer of the Government ought to be that which will compensate him for the services which he renders the Government; so much and no more. I believe further that if the salaries of the circuit judges are to be $10,000 or $9,000, the salaries of the district judges ought to be as much.

not believe there ought to be any distinction between the salaries of the district judges and the circuit judges. I do not believe there is any difference between the work done by one set of judges and that done by the other set of judges.

I do not take to the doctrine of paying occupants of offices for I do not think that what is termed the "dignity" of the office. dignity is a purchasable commodity; and if it is, I do not think the Government of the United States ought to be in the purchasing business, so far as that commodity is concerned. I think that dignity is found in the footman who walks the roads or streets just as well as in the occupant of a cushioned carriage drawn by a splendid team, driven by a coachman in livery, or the occupants of automobiles. The dignity is in the man, not in the office. Dignity is the state of being worthy. It is the elevation of the man or character. It is true worth, and that may be found in the man who follows the plow, or in the blacksmith who works in a shop, or in the man with overalls working in a shop, as well as in a man in a lawyer's office, or wearing judicial ermine, or in the man in the highest office within the gift of the American people—the President of the United States.

It is this that has impelled me to take the floor on this ques-tion. It is because I do not believe, and have never believed, in this talk that no dignity can be found except in the occupant of an office. I think those who are in the private walks of life are just as dignified, if they desire to be, as the man who occupies the highest official station in the Government of the country, and for that reason I have opposed all along the increases which are being made in the salaries of officers where the salary is based upon the dignity of the office.

I wish it were in this country that those who have the administration of the Government in their hands could understand that they are the representatives of the people, who are really the governing power of the country, and that it is the duty of people in official position to teach the American people, so far as their conduct and their administration of official or executive office is concerned, that true dignity, true worth, true elevation of character and mind, ought to be in all the people of the country who elevate these officers to the positions they occupy and to the dignity, or the assumed dignity, that is contained in them.

It is all very well in monarchical countries, and especially in those where the people have very little or no voice in the administration of the government, to treat with utter contempt and utter disgust the thought of dignity anywhere except in official position.

But it does not do and ought not to do in this country Every sovereign voter in this country ought to be taught and ought to understand that dignity is required of him as much as it is of the men who are elevated to high position in the administration of the government of the country.

I was going to say something in reference to the point that was made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], that we are expending hundreds of millions of dollars upon the army and upon the navy and upon the Philippines and other useless extravagances, and therefore those extravagant and useless expenditures are predicated as an argument for this expenditure, whether the expenditure be right or wrong.

Now, let this stand upon its merits. If it is wrong to expend $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 upon the army of the country and $100,000,000 upon the navy and a thousand million dollars upon the Philippine Islands, that is no argument whatever why this should be done if it is wrong. We ought to stop the extravagant expenditures in the army and the navy and the Philippines. We ought to lop off all the extravagances of this country and bring it down to a simple republican, democratic form of government, and not try to keep up with the crowned heads of Europe by our salaries or in any other particular except in the independence and the nobility and greatness of the country which we represent and of the people whom we represent.

I think that the expenditures for the army ought to be cut down at least one-half, and I think if they were cut down two-thirds it would be better for the country, because we do not need any great standing army. I think the same is true as to the navy. We hear talk about a world power. We have been a world power ever since the treaty with Great Britain that recognized the independence of this country, and we will continue to be a world power whether we have a small army and a small navy or whether we have a great army and a great navy. It is not necessary for this country to have great armies and great navies in order to make itself respected abroad. The governments of the world do not desire to attack a powerful country any more than men in private life desire to attack a brave man who is capable and able to defend himself.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything with reference to these salaries, and I would not have said anything but for the fact that there is constant talk here about the dignity of these positions, and I wanted to express once for all my opinion that dignity does not depend upon official position, and it does not depend upon the holding of office, but dignity is in the real merit, the real worth of the individual, and may be found in the humblest walks of life as well as in the highest walks of life

I repeat what I started out to say and then I shall have done. If the salaries of the circuit judges ought to be $10,000, the salaries of the district judges ought to be as much. While I intend to vote against the raising of the salaries of the district judges, as I have voted consistently against the raising of the salaries of the other judges, yet if, when the bill shall come into the Senate and the salaries shall be voted upon there, the salaries of the circuit judges shall be fixed at $10,000, I shall be in favor of fixing the salaries of the district judges at an amount equally as much.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope we may now have a

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I feel obliged to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 167, line 23, in the committee amendment, strike out "eight" and insert "nine," so that if amended it will read:

For salaries of the 84 district judges of the United States, at $9,000

Mr. BORAH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when the name of Mr. Clarke of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. Clarke of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich].

Mr. SCOTT (when the name of Mr. Elkins was called). My colleague [Mr. Elkins] is unavoidably absent from the city, and is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was unavoidably called from the Chamber, and I am paired with him. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KEAN. My colleague [Mr. Briggs] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr.

Mr. BAILEY (after having voted in the negative). nounced on the previous roll call that I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], but I also announced at that time that I transferred my pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore]. Consequently, I voted.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DAN-IEL] is necessarily absent and is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

The result was announced-yeas 30, nays 38.

mittee was rejected.

Mr. FULTON. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment fixing the salaries of circuit judges at $10,000 was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Did the Senator vote in the affirmative?
Mr. FULTON. I do not know whether I voted on the queson or not. I think it was a viva voce vote.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves tion or not.

to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary, was agreed to.

The Secretary. Before the word "thousand," in line 13, page 167, "seven" was stricken out and "ten" inserted, so as to read :

For 29 circuit judges, at $10,000 each.

Mr. FULTON. I wish simply to state that I expect to follow up the motion by moving that the salary be placed at $9,000, and then, if somebody else does not, I will move that the salary of the district judges be made $8,500. I think that will be something nearer what the increase should be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon to reconsider the vote by which the amendment just stated was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is before the Senate on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FULTON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "nine thousand" instead of "ten thousand."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 167, line 13, strike out "ten" and insert "nine," so that if amended it will read:

For 29 circuit judges, at $9,000 each.

Mr. DIXON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "eight" in place of "nine" before the word "thousand."

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator knows, that would be an amendment in the third degree.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would be in the third degree. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I submit a parliamentary inquiry as to the status of the amendment fixing the salary of the district judges.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendment is now the question before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FULTON. What is the amount?

Mr. CULLOM and Mr. WARREN. Eight thousand dollars.

Mr. FULTON. I move to increase that amount to $8,500.

["No!" "No!"] Very well; I withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon withdraws his amendment to the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 24 strike out "five hundred and four" and insert "six hundred and seventy-two," so as to read "$672,000.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. I appeal to the Senator from Montana to permit us to finish the bill. I have been very patient about it. The Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] has another appropriation bill awaiting the conclusion of this measure. I think it will take only a few minutes longer.

Mr. LODGE. All these are committee amendments, and there may be some other amendments to be offered by individual Senators. Those come subsequent to the committee amendments. We are still on the committee amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I understand; but I think we are about through, and I should like to find out whether we are in a position to complete the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana withdraws the motion. The Secretary will again state the pending amendment of the committee.

The Secretary. In line 24 strike out "five hundred and four" and insert "six hundred and seventy-two," changing the total to $672,000.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest that the amendment ought not to be adopted now, because some of the individual items above have been changed. The circuit-court amendment has been changed from $10,000 to $9,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The total relates alone to the item for the district courts.

Mr. CULBERSON. I see.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. WARREN. The next amendment, I think, occurs on page 168, line 13.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 168, line 13, the committee proposes to strike out "seven thousand five hundred" and insert ten thousand." Mr. BORAH. I wish to propose an amendment to the amend-

Mr. WARREN. I have an amendment that the committee wish to offer at this point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is first in order.

Mr. WARREN. In view of the vote just taken, I think we should reduce the $10,000 for the chief justice of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia to $9,000, the same as the circuit judges. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "nine" before "thousand."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 168, line 13, strike out "ten" in the committee amendment and insert "nine," so that, if amended, it will read:

For the chief justice of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, $9,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to make the same amendment in the following line as to the two associate justices. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "nine" before "thousand," so as to read:

And for two associate justices, at $9,000 each.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand that it is proposed to fix the compensation of the associate justices of the District of Columbia court of appeals at $9,000?

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. I will only observe that that is giving the judge of a court whose jurisdiction is over 250,000 people double the average salary of those who hold similar offices in the States and whose jurisdiction covers the litigation of 3,000,000 people. If it is believed that a man who serves the Federal Government is entitled to double the pay of a man who does more work for the state government, then that kind of an amendment ought to be adopted.

I want to say that Senators here could not engage in legislation better calculated to exalt the Nation and to dwarf the State than the continued, unbroken assertion that the man who works for the Federal Government deserves a higher value than the man who works for a sovereign Commonwealth.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact, also, that this is an increase of $2,500 in the salary for this office at this particular time.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the present salary?

Mr. BORAH. It is $7,500. Mr. WARREN. I did not understand the Senator. Will he make his statement again?

Mr. BORAH. The salary as it is put into this bill would be an increase of $2,500, while the salary as proposed by the amendment would still be an increase of $1,500.

Mr. WARREN. It would.

Mr. BORAH. It would be an increase of fifteen hundred dollars over the present salary?

Mr. WARREN. It would.

Mr. BAILEY. On that I demand the yeas and nays. Mr. WARREN. I only want to say, in this connection, that this court does more business than any of the other circuit courts in the United States, save three, and does equally as much as one of those three; and it is not the business of the District of Columbia alone, but it is business from the entire United States.

I would ask the Senator from Wyoming where Mr. BORAH. he gets the information that this court does more work than the circuit courts?

Mr. WARREN. We have the list here of the cases. Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, without any special information, I say without a minute's hesitation that that court does not do as much work as three-fourths of the supreme courts of the various States. As a matter of fact, its jurisdiction over matters not arising in this District is extremely limited. know that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. The yeas and nays were called for, Mr. Presi-

Mr. BAILEY. I did not understand that this was a committee amendment reducing salaries from $10,000 to $9,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to that. That is not the

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to that. That is not the amendment on which I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I should like to say a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in answer to the remarks made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley] a moment ago, I think somebody should state the matter. I shall have to state it from recollection, that there was a statement furnished to the Judiciary Committee-I think it must have come from the Department of Justice, though I am not certain about that, but I know such a statement was furnished, and I had a copy, which is on my desk at my residence, however-showing, very greatly to my surprise, that this court here does much more business than all the circuit courts of the United States except only the three which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has stated, and the amount of business is practically the same in this court that it is in one of those three. I was greatly surprised to learn it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. For the information of the Senator from Ohio, I will say that the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, having the same jurisdiction as the circuit courts of the United States since the circuit courts of appeals have been established, has been exceeded in the number of cases disposed of by only two circuits in the United States, to wit, the second and the eighth.

Mr. BORAH. The question of the number of cases disposed of does not settle the question of the amount of business which a court does. In determining a proposition they may dispose of twenty or thirty cases.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. This court relatively does more business, because every opinion and judgment of the court is by law compelled to be in writing.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 10, on page 169, where I think the words "five hundred" before the word "dollars," ought to be stricken out in order to put it in harmony with the provision relative to the district judges.

Mr. WARREN. We have not arrived at that point, but when we do, the committee will offer an amendment to strike out "five hundred."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 168, line 13, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "nine" and insert "eight," so as to read:

Court of appeals, District of Columbia: For the chief justice of court of appeals of the District of Columbia, $8,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the condition of affairs. The court of appeals of the District of Columbia through all our legislation, through all our appropriations for salaries, has stood on an exact par with the circuit courts of the United States, both as to jurisdiction and as to salaries, except that the salary of the chief justice of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia has been $500 per annum more than the salary of the circuit judges of the United States; and there never has been an attempt in any of our legislation to separate these courts from the circuit courts of the United States as to the matter of dignity, as to the matter of jurisdiction, or as to the matter of salary.

Mr. President, attention also should be Mr. FORAKER. called to the fact that one-half of these salaries is paid by the District of Columbia, and but one-half is paid out of the Treasury of the United States. I have a statement here, which is not so complete as the one I referred to a moment ago, but which I think will give some information to the Senate, which it ought to have the benefit of, and I ask that it may be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the statement submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

The Secretary proceeded to read the paper.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate at this hour, unless some Senator insists upon it, to have all these details read.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to have them go in the

Mr. FORAKER. I was going to ask that. Mr. BAILEY. Because I think it will demonstrate exactly what I said a moment ago, that none of these courts transact business comparable to the volume of business transacted in the supreme courts of the States.

Mr. FORAKER. I was going to suggest, in order to save time, that the paper be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The paper referred to is as follows:

By section 61 of the Code of the District of Columbia the supreme court of the District of Columbia "shall possess the same powers and exercise the same jurisdiction as the circuit and district courts of the United States, and shall be deemed a court of the United States."

By section 62 "the justices of said court, in addition to the powers and jurisdiction possessed and exercised by them as such, * * * shall severally possess the powers and exercise the jurisdiction possessed and exercised by the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States."

This court transacts in the District of Columbia all the business, civil and criminal, that is transacted by both federal courts and the state courts of record throughout the several States. It is the only federal court which possesses jurisdiction to issue the original writ of mandamus, and is the only federal court of original jurisdiction of cases in mandamus and injunction against the various heads of the departments of the Federal Government and their bureaus. There is no other court of record of original jurisdiction in the District of Columbia

One-half the salary of the justices of the court is by law charged against the revenues of the District of Columbia. (Code, sec. 60.)

The last act of Congress fixing the salary of federal judges, including those of the court of appeals and the supreme court of the District of Columbia, is the act of February 12, 1903. (Stat. L., vol. 32, pt. 1, p. 825.)

BUSINESS OF THE COURT.

From the report of the Attorney-General for the fiscal year July, 1907, to July, 1908, it appears that the number of cases brought in all the circuit and district courts of the United States west of the Mississippi River (excepting California), including Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, exclusive of bankruptcy cases, was bankruptcy cases, was

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether or not the act just referred to would apply at all to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia? It mentions the supreme court. I have never been under the impression that the District of Columbia pays any part of the salaries of the judges of the court of appeals, but only those of the supreme court of the District.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not able to answer that question. was handed the statement which I asked to have read, and I thought the statement which was handed to me by the Senator in charge of the bill related only to the court of appeals. It relates to both; and it may be that the Senator from Idaho is correct in what he says. I do not know.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not made a specific investigation; but I think I am correct.

Mr. BAILEY. The court of appeals here is a separate court from the supreme court.

Mr. HEYBURN. The supreme court has a different character of jurisdiction within the District of Columbia from that belonging to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FORAKER. The court of appeals corresponds to the circuit courts of the United States and intermediate courts, and I supposed the salaries were paid in both courts in the same way. I could not now answer the Senator's question, although I could do so in the morning.

Mr. HEYBURN. Unless there is some other legislation on the subject than that contained in the statement in reference to the bill just read at the Secretary's desk, it would not cover the circuit court.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire, in order to have the Record correct, to say that the salaries of the judges of the court of appeals as well as of the supreme court of the District of Columbia are paid one-half from the revenues of the District and one-half from the Treasury of the United States. There was some controversy about that matter,

Mr. WARREN. Those salaries are paid one half by the District and the other half from the Treasury of the United States. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. FORAKER. On what question, Mr. President? The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] to strike out "nine" and insert "eight" in the clause providing for the salary of the chief justice of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know exactly what we are voting on. I think there is a good deal of misapprehension in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the amendment striking out "nine" and inserting "eight."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understood that that was already voted upon.

Mr. LODGE. We agreed to "nine," and now the motion is to strike out "nine" and insert "eight."

Mr. DAVIS (when the name of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scorr]. He is out of the Chamber. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money], but I transfer that pair so that that Senator will stand paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. Platt], and I will vote. I vote "nay."
The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McLAURIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I forgot that I was paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. Mr. GAMBLE (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has voted? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Nevada has not voted.

Mr. GAMBLE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Nevada, but I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. Nixon] and allow my vote to stand. The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 33, as follows:

So Mr. Borah's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to ask how the amendment in regard to the salary of the members of the district court of appeals now stands. It is my understanding that the amendment proposed by the committee to the amendment previously reported reducing the amount from $10,000 to $9,000 was agreed to, and that the Senate refused to reduce the amount further from nine thousand to eight thousand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct as to the amendment in relation to the salary of the chief justice of the court of appeals. The question now is, Shall the amendment as amended be agreed to?

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 168, line 14, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out the word "seven" and insert "ten." so as to read:

Court of appeals, District of Columbia.: For the chief justice of court of appeals of the District of Columbia, $9,000; and for two associate justices, at $10,000 each.

Mr. WARREN. Has not that amendment been acted on likewise?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments were not acted upon together.

Mr. GALLINGER. That amendment has not yet been acted

Mr. WARREN. I certainly moved to change that from "ten" to "nine," and I thought it was announced that it had been so changed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator moved to amend the proposed two amendments at the same time. The Chair suggested that the amendments would have to be acted on separ-The second amendment is now in order.

ately. The second amendment is now in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on that matter, as the law now stands, the chief justice of the district court of appeals is given $500 more than the associate justices. The amendment now pending proposes to put them on an equality. Is that the purpose of the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. That is the way it is in the case of all circuit judges, and that was the purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was not the purpose according to the text of the House bill at any rate. I move an amendment to make the salary of the associate justices $8,500.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the 29 circuit judges are all on a par, and it has been settled, I think, by the vote here and by expressions in the debate that the justices of the court of appeals should receive the same as the judges of the circuit courts. I should prefer that the Senator should undertake to raise the salary of the chief justice of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia rather than reduce the salaries of the associate justices, because it would throw it out of harmony with the remainder of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the motion, Mr. President, for the reason that it seems to be the universal practice in our legislation to give the chief justice of a court a larger salary than his associates.

Mr. WARREN. But it is not the practice in the circuit courts and never has been. There is not a single circuit court in the United States where one judge gets more than another. Mr. McLAURIN. He ought not to.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no chief justice of a circuit court.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no chief justice.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to know whether the chief justice does any more work than the associates,

Mr. GALLINGER. He does not.

Mr. KEAN. He presides.
Mr. BAILEY. Then, the $500 is simply for the dignity.
Mr. GALLINGER. My motion simply follows the rule. But if the Senator from Wyoming insists upon it, I will withdraw my motion. I do not care anything about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how far he proposes to proceed with it to-night?

Mr. WARREN. I should like to get a vote of the Senate upon the next two items. The committee has one other amendment. Then I shall ask that the bill go over, not asking that it may be reported to the Senate, but to be taken up as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, when the bill is reported to the Senate it will be subject to amendment the same as in

Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be.

Mr. BORAH. In view of that fact, and in view of the lateness of the hour, I do not propose to offer any more amendments at this time.

Mr. WARREN. In line 10, on page 169, the committee ask that the words "five hundred" may be stricken out.

The Secretary. On page 169, line 10, after the words "District of Columbia," the Committee on Appropriations report an amendment to insert "$8,500;" in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so as to make the clause read:

Supreme court, District of Columbia: For salaries of the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $8,500, and of the 5 associate judges, at $8,000 each.

It is now proposed to strike out "five hundred," in line 10, so as to read "eight thousand dollars."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next passed-over amendment was, on page 170, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six thousand five hundred" and insert "eight thousand;" in line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" and in line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fifty-five thousand eight" and insert "sixty-three thousand three," so as to read:

Court of Claims: For the chief justice of the Court of Claims, $8,000; 4 judges, at $7,500 each; chief clerk, $3,500; assistant clerk, $2,500; balliff, $1,500; 1 clerk, $1,600; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; stengrapher, $1,200; 3 clerks, at $1,200 each; 1 chief messenger, $1,000; 3 firemen; 3 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; 2 assistant messengers; 1 laborer; and 2 charwomen; in all, $63,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. There is another amendment to complete this subject-matter which I desire to offer. It is in the exact language proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary. I will ask that it be inserted on page 171, after line 22.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 171, after line 22, it is proposed to

The salaries of the Chief Justice, associate justices, and circuit and district judges of the United States, of the chief justice and associate justices of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, of the chief justice and associate judges of the supreme court, District of Columbia, and for the chief justice and judges of the Court of Claims are fixed at the sums herein provided and shall be paid to said justices and judges, respectively, unless otherwise provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I have here some information that was called for from the Treasury Department which I think ought to go in the RECORD, and will ask that it may be published in the RECORD, and that it also be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[Senate Doc. No. 672, 60th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. WARREN. We have now completed the bill, so far as committee amendments are concerned, and with the consent of the Senate I will pause at this point and let the bill go over. I will ask the Senate to take it up to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask whether under that arrangement the bill will be open to amendment?

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 21, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou eternal and ever living God, our heavenly Father, we bless Thy holy name that Thou hast not left us in this world alone to grope our way in the darkness, but that the light of Thy presence is round about us shining in and through us to illumine our minds, cleanse our hearts; upholding, sustaining, guiding us to right thinking and clean living. That for every tear there are a thousand smiles; for every sorrow a thousand joys; for every crime a thousand noble, generous deeds; for every low and selfish desire a thousand glorious aspirations. That the star of love is in the ascendency leading us onward and upward. Continue, we beseech Thee, Thy presence and help us to do Thy will, and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONSULATE AT CATANIA, ITALY.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26709) to amend an act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," approved April 5, 1906, as heretofore amended, is further amended as follows: By striking out, in class 9, consuls, the word "Messina," and by inserting after the word "Carlsbad," in class 7, consuls, the word "Catania."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to interrogate the gentleman. One feature of this is the substitution of Catania for Messina. Now, what is the other proposition?

Mr. PERKINS. The other proposition is this: Messina was in the ninth class, and consuls in the ninth class receive $2,000. As we all know, the consul at Messina not only incurred the labor of his position, but risk of life besides. At Catania it is hoped no such calamity may occur, but by reason of the earthquake and its results, a very large amount of work will be required; and the committee was of the opinion that for that position in that place with that amount of work, with the possibility of risk, to say no more, $3,000 was not an excessive sum to pay. The pay of the consul at Catania will be $3,000. The to pay. The pay of the consul at Catania will be $3,000. The pay of the consul at Messina, which is now abolished, was $2,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no doubt that for several years to come it will entail a great deal of extra work, and I have no objection to that. I see something in the bill here about Carlsbad.

Mr. PERKINS. No; the name of Catania is inserted immediately after Carlsbad in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is all it refers to?

Mr. PERKINS. That is all.

By unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion of Mr. Perkins to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. Foss, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26394, the naval appropriation bill, Mr. MANN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday a point of order was reserved on lines 1 to 4, page 33.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest we go on with the reading of the bill at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the item passed over yesterday will be passed over, and the Clerk will continue the reading of the bill-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there was a paragraph read to which a point of order was made. It was not passed over, but the committee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending point of order reserved by the gentleman from New York was to the first four lines, page 33, and the Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois upon the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I care to discuss the point of order, but for the information of the Chair I will state that these barracks are not for the extension of any barracks there at the navy-yard. They are separate and are a new proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New fork missist upon his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me when the naval bill carries $135,000,000, more than any naval bill ever brought in, considering we are facing a deficit of $150,000,000 this coming year, that no condition has necessitated provision at this particular place for marines that requires an appropriation larger than $22,000, and that this is one item that may well be permitted to go over to another year, and I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL,

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the completion of the marine garrison, naval station, Pearl Harboz, Territory of Hawaii, 1 marine barracks, $135,000; and to complete 6 officers' quarters, $50,000; in all, $185,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves

the point of order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the chairman of the committee I reserve the point of order against the paragraph providing for the completion of marine garrison, naval station, Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, 1 marine barracks, $135,000; and to complete 6 officers' quarters, $50,000; in all, $185,000. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is existing law authorizing this work, and if it is in continuation of work already in progress?

Mr. FOSS. Now, I would state last year we passed through this House a bill for the establishment of a navy-yard at Pearl Harbor, and that provision was put on by a Senate amendment to the naval appropriation bill last year and became a law. Now, I will read to the gentleman what that provision is.

Upon this point I would like to have the attention of the Chair. Right here it will be recalled that a naval station was provided for Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and the language under which it was established is this:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to establish a naval station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on the site heretofore acquired for that purpose, and to erect thereat all the necessary machine shops, warehouses, coal sheds, and other necessary buildings, and to build thereat one graving dry dock capable of receiving the largest war vessels of the navy, at a cost not to exceed $2,000,000 for said dry dock.

Now, the question is whether or not, under that authorization, all necessary buildings in connection with the establishment of the navy-yard is not in order. I would say for the information of the Chair that it is a part of the duty of the Marine Corps to garrison our navy-yards, to perform police duty, and to protect them in every way. And it seemed to me that the language was broad enough to carry this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois inform the Chair whether as a matter of fact it is customary to have marines stationed at naval stations?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; it is.

Mr. TAWNEY. At a naval station?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; always.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. And there are barracks at every naval station. There are at the present time, Mr. Chairman, 300 marines at this station without any cover whatever except tents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rulings have been consistent that unless the building is specifically authorized it can not be provided on an appropriation bill. The Chair is familiar with the rule of construction: General language following specific words can not be used to enlarge the authority given in a statute for any purpose, even under a rule of the House.

Marines at a navy-yard are not a part of its equipment, and the language to which the gentleman refers shows that the purpose of the Congress was to provide a manufacturing or repairing establishment at this place. It seems to me, if it would be in order under that language to erect marine barracks, it would be in order to erect them at any navy-yard in the United States. It is not even in order on a bill of this character to erect any building at a navy-yard unless it is specifically authorized. The precedents are to that effect. It has been held that it is not in order to erect barracks for sailors at a navy-yard, and sailors are much more a part of the navy and the naval service than marines are.

Mr. MACON. If the Chair please, upon the point of order
I will say that the authorization is general as carried in the appropriation bill of last year. I call the attention of the Chair to the following language of the act of last year that gentlemen contend authorizes this appropriation:

And to erect thereat all the necessary machine shops, warehouses, coal sheds, and other necessary buildings, and to build thereat one graving dry dock capable of receiving the largest war vessels of the navy, etc.

That language gives authority in a general way to construct necessary buildings, but in the provision in this bill it provides for certain particular buildings namely:

To complete six officers' quarters, $50,000.

Now, if we can legislate in that way upon an appropriation bill, there would be no limit to this matter whatever until we reached the limit of the authorization, which is $2,000,000. There is nothing to show that these buildings are necessary, and I undertake to say that it is contrary to the policy of the legislation of the House to appropriate for the construction of particular buildings upon an authorization of a general character unless it can be shown that the buildings to be constructed are necessary buildings. I will not undertake to discuss the point made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], because he is better informed upon the precedents of the House than I am, but I do not understand that the appropriation carried in this bill is a proper one under the authorization carried in the appropriation bill of a year ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a precedent, which may have some influence with the Chair. I recollect an instance, which I think will be found in the fourth volume of the Parliamentary Precedents, where the gentleman now occupying the chair made a point of order on a provision for a set of officers' quarters, I believe at New Orleans, and the Chair sustained the point of order raised by the present occupant of the chair. I believe it will be found in section 3758 or 3759, or in that neighborhood. There is no doubt that it should be equally binding, because the language under which that station was established in circles. under which that station was established is similar to the language under which this station is established.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from New York point out the language under which the naval station at New Orleans was established?

If the Chair will give me time, I shall. Mr. FITZGERALD. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The item Toward the completion of the marine garrison, naval station, Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, one marine barracks, $135,000; and to complete six officers' quarters, $50,000; in all, $185,000.

A point of order is made against the paragraph. The rule is that, unless the item is authorized by existing law, it is not in order on an appropriation bill. The last naval appropriation bill contained this item:

Naval station, Pearl Harbor, Hawali: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to establish a naval station at Pearl Harbor, Hawali, on the site heretofore acquired for that purpose; and to erect thereat all the necessary machine shops, storehouses, coal sheds, and other necessary buildings, and to build thereat one graving dry dock capable of receiving the largest war vessels of the navy, at a cost not to exceed $2,000,000 for said dry dock.

The act of Congress last year plainly authorized the naval station at Pearl Harbor, and enumerated certain buildings which might or might not be necessary at the naval station. It then authorized the erection of other necessary buildings. If the erection of a marine barracks is a necessary building at a naval station, it would seem that Congress had intended to and has authorized the construction of such a building, as a necessary building at a naval station. And, in the opinion of the Chair, on the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], that it is not only customary but necessary to have marine barracks at a naval station, the Chair will overrule the point of order.

In all, public works, Marine Corps, $510,000.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention of the Committee of the Whole to the matters referred to by the chairman of the committee in the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which is printed in the RECORD this morning, bearing on the section of the bill which went out on a point of order yesterday, providing for the continuance of the present railway tracks to the navy-yard in Washington. This is a very important matter, and I anticipate, inasmuch as the Naval Committee of the House has brought in such a provision, that if the same committee in the other body and the Senate embodies a similar provision as an amendment, that in conference that amendment will certainly stand a very good chance to pass, because we act on conference reports as a whole.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a number of years ago-about eight, I -Congress passed a law to eliminate grade crossings in the District of Columbia, which first authorized the construction of two railway stations, and by subsequent legislation authorized the erection of the Union Station. One of the chief arguments made to the House and the Committee on the District of Columbia for abolishing grade crossings was to get this very line of road out of the middle of the streets of Washington; and it was represented to us that there was on this portion of the road what is known as the "dead angle," on which many fatal accidents had occurred. Congress has spent, through the Government and the District of Columbia, about five and a half millions of dollars in money and property, in order that this danger, with others due to grade crossings, might be removed from the city of Washington. The law required these grade crossings to be removed by last spring—I do not remember the precise date. There was a bill introduced and passed in the Senate authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in fact, though not in name, to build a road down the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River to, and connecting with, the navy-yard, appropriating $25,000, and giving them the right of way in such of the public streets as might be used. In conference the $25,000 was stricken out, and an amendment authorizing any other railroad that might build a track to a connection with the authorized track to use the same on such terms as might be agreed to; and on failure to agree on such terms, it might be decided by the supreme court of the District of Columbia. That is the law today, giving two years in which to build. That law has not been complied with by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Whether or not they can be forced, under the law, to do so, I am not prepared to say; but these grade crossings should be eliminated, and under the provisions of the committee proviso, which went out on a point of order, it would have stayed there indefinitely. In other words, there is no provision for the elimina-tion of this grade crossing by providing for the construction of introduced a bill at the last session of Congress authorizing the Navy Department to build the line which we authorized the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to build. That bill passed this House by a unanimous vote by way of substitute for the very provision now in this bill, and every member of the Committee on Naval Affairs voted for that bill, who were present, as I now recall the vote, as the yeas and nays were ordered.

Another bill was introduced by myself at this session, containing identically the same provisions, authorizing and requiring the Navy Department to build this road. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], chairman of the Naval Committee, has read a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which is, in fact, more a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he estimates the cost at $303,683.33; but that includes four whole squares of land. It is not necessary to have these entire squares. The track only requires 33 feet, and the District Committee in its hearings had a statement from the surveyor of the District of Columbia that every foot of this road could be built upon public property.

But suppose it is true that it would take $303,000. It will take more than that two years from now, with a friendly lawsuit in progress, which can better be characterized as a collusive lawsuit, and an injunction issued against the railroad restraining it from tearing up its tracks, which injunction has been made permanent until May 27, 1910. Why not legislate now and let the Government build a track down to the navyyard and be done with it? Is the committee conniving at an effort to hold the tracks in the middle of K and Canal streets, where people may be slaughtered ruthlessly?

As I say, it will cost more two years from now. vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad says in his letter:

Permit me to say that, in my judgment, the United States Government should build and own this track, which is, after all, as much a part of the navy-yard plant as any other constituent portion of it. It is what would be required of a private enterprise under similar conditions.

That is what the second vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad says, and I indorse every word he says. Now, why try to get around this in this way, by having an amendment put in here and go out on point of order, and then have it go over to the Senate, and there amended again by inserting the same, and then go to conference, with no opportunity to vote on it separately in this House, but compel us to accept it or vote down the whole naval appropriation bill? If the gentleman wants to carry out the purpose for which the law was enacted, let the bill which I have introduced and which has passed this House be voted as an amendment on this bill, and by the time the injunction expires the railroad will be completed, the navyyard will have the use of it, and it will be done in conformity with the suggestion of the Pennsylvania Railroad itself.

Now, why put it off for two years? Are we going to put it Are we never going to reach the navy-yard except by a track running through K and Canal streets, right down through the center of the street, right through a public playground where the children have to be roped off to save their lives? This track is serving the garbage plant, which ought to be removed, which is a disgrace to Congress and the District of Columbia to keep it where it is; is serving the Standard Oil Company plant, as well as the navy-yard. Why not take this matter up? Offer an amendment, and I assure you there will be no point of order against it. Permit the Government to do it and have it removed. I hold that it is not necessary to expend the whole $300,000; but even if it is necessary, will you take the chance of murdering women and children on this street, with this railroad not only crossing at grade, but absolutely down the middle of the street? Will you hesitate on account of the dollars and cents involved? I hope the committee will take a proper view of this matter and ask to return to this paragraph and offer the amendment themselves. To-day those very people are being assessed to pay for benefits under the elimination of grade crossings. Yet this dangerous track is proposed by this committee to stay there indefinitely. of justice is it to make these people along that line of road pay for eliminating grade crossings in other parts of the city and keep right at their own doors a railroad track which is a danger to their lives, which destroys the value of their property? I do certainly think the Naval Committee did not give this matter proper consideration. Of course the railroad company will be satisfied to keep it there forever, but they suggest that we build it, and that is a proper suggestion, and it ought to be done.

The bill I introduced provides for $90,000 for construction. The estimate only shows $93,000 for the construction, and the surveyor of the District of Columbia says that every inch of it can go on government property; but suppose it can not? We did not hestitate to build the House Office Building because property owners in that square asked too much for the land. We went ahead and condemned it and erected the building. We can condemn and take this property.

But we do not have to have whole squares. Even if we do, the property will be valuable to the navy-yard, because it is right up against the navy-yard itself.

It will be valuable to the Government to own that property. We can never do it for less money than we can now. bills being reported for the acquiring of parks beyond the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, and yet here are $13,000,000 worth of government property at the navy-yard, and the Naval Committee proposes only a temporary makeshift that involves the loss of life and property. I make this statement that the matter may be fully understood, and I hope the Naval Committee will ask to return it to the bill and amend by putting in proper legislation so as to get this track built in two years, as it ought to be done.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. I will. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is this provision in the bill that went out yesterday, undertaking to repeal the statute passed on that subject?

Mr. SIMS. Absolutely repealing to that extent the law that was passed for the very purpose of eliminating these grade crossings

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8265. An act to regulate examinations for promotion in the Medical Corps of the army; and

S. R. 115. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to establish harbor lines in the Kansas River at Kansas City,

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15452. An act to establish two or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session. The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

Medical Department: For surgeons' necessaries for vessels in commission, navy-yards, naval stations, Marine Corps, and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy-yards, naval laboratory, museum of hygiene, and department of instruction, and Naval Academy,

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Navy may direct, in writing, the Surgeon-General of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to make special investigations into the prevalence of tuberculosis, typhoid fever, rabies, leprosy, and other similar diseases affecting man, the conditions influencing their propagation and spread, and methods necessary for their prevention and suppression. The investigation of rabies shall include the preparation and use of the virus or other substance made in the hygienic laboratory for its prevention in those exposed. The Surgeon-General, with the approval of the said Secretary, is authorized on request of the health authorities of the State, Territory, the District of Columbia, Porto Rico, or the Philippines, to detail officers to cooperate with said authorities in their measures for the protection of the public health.

"That the Secretary of the Navy may direct that the results of the investigations authorized shall be published, and also that there be disseminated by means of sanitary bulletins and exhibits prepared by the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service practical information concerning the prevention or suppression of tuberculosis, typhoid fever, rabies, leprosy, and other similar diseases pertaining to man."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment. If I understand it correctly, it relates to the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. It is not in order on this bill, I will say to the gentleman; the naval bill does not appropriate for Marine-Hospital Service. That is appropriated for in the sundry civil

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I understand that this Bureau of Medicine and Surgery is controlled by the Marine-Hospital Service, and for that reason I thought the amendment would be germane to this paragraph in the bill. The Secretary of the Navy would have charge of the expenditure of this money.

Mr. FOSS. The navy has nothing to do with the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, my understanding of the matter is that under the Secretary of the Navy the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery would make the investigation of these diseases. If not a proper place for this amendment, of course I will offer it at another time.

Mr. FOSS. I understand, then, the gentleman withdraws his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his amendment?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No; Mr. Chairman, I will ask for a ruling by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service has nothing to do with the Marine Corps; that service is a branch of the Treasury Department and is not under the Navy Department. Besides, the amendment is purely legislation, and for both reasons, or for a sufficient reason, the Chair

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. What was the last appropriation—how much did it carry?

Mr. FOSS. Two hundred and seventy thousand dollars. This is an increase of $30,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, $424,700.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman what increase there is in the total appropriation. I see the total appropriation in this bill is $424,700.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The increase is $39,000.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. What is the increase in the

Mr. FOSS. About $13,000,000 over last year. The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

Provisions, navy: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes, in case of death or desertion, upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Pay Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, and chief sailmakers) and midshipmen, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited to the naval hospital fund; subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given); and for subsistence of female nurses and navy and marine corps general courtsmartial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement: Provided, That the Secretary, of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; labor in general storehouses and paymasters' offices in navy-yards, including naval stations maintained in island possessions under the control of the United States, and expenses in handling stores purchased under the naval supply fund; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations, as required: Provided, That hereafter such stores as the Secretary of the Navy may designate may be procured and sold to officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, also to civilian employees at naval stations beyond the continental limits of the United States and in Alaska, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy, for chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the general storehouses and paymasters' offices of the

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the first proviso in the paragraph just read. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the purpose of making this provision for the commutation of rations of certain described prisoners?

Mr. FOSS. To save money. Under the present law the rations are commuted at 30 cents, and under this provision they will be 22 cents. It is only to save money to the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. From the statement of the chairman that the purpose of the provision is simply in the interest of economy, and that it is a worthy one, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank; designing naval vessels; construction and repair of yard craft, lighters, and barges; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care, increase, and protection of the navy in the line of construction and repair; inciphotographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, and for pay of classified force under the bureau, $8,979,144: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 10 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 20 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make expenditures from appropriate funds under the various bureaus for repairs and changes on the vessels herein named, in an amount not to exceed the sum specified for each vessel, respectively, as follows: Maine (in addition to the $200,000 authorized by the naval appropriation act approved May 13, 1908), $520,000; Missouri, $540,000; Ohio, $540,000; Wisconsin, $380,000 navy-yards, naval stations, and offices of superintending naval con-structors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, shall not exceed $808,039.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of obtaining some information. I notice in the enumeration of battle ships for which repairs are provided in the item just read that there are many bearing the same amount, namely, that to the Chattanooga, the Cleveland, the Denver, the Des Moines, the Galveston, the Tacoma, each carrying an appropriation of $210,000. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether there are any repairs of a Mr. FOSS. This comes to us all itemized, generally. I do not know that there is any special significance in the fact that the same amount is carried for each one, unless it be that these vessels are in the same class, and about the same amount would be necessary for their general overhauling.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it intended to make alterations on them of a like kind that will involve the same amount of expense, or is it in the nature of repairs solely?

Mr. FOSS. In the nature of repairs, a general overhauling. Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman describe what repairs are necessary to keep these battle ships in order so as to make them valuable as a fighting arm of the Government?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, well, take, for instance, the Ohio. There has to be a general overhauling of the Ohio, changes in the battery and the magazines, and so forth, to bring the ship up in accordance with the present practice, miscellaneous improvements, and alterations necessary for the safety of the ship. That is a ship which was built a number of years ago, and it is necessary in order to bring that up to the highest standard of efficiency that these alterations and repairs should be made from time to time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any data ever been presented to the committee as to what is the average cost for making repairs to provide for the usual wear and tear of a battle ship each year?
Mr. FOSS. No; I do not know that we have any data on that that I can furnish the gentleman. It depends entirely on the new improvements that are taking place all the time.

Mr. BUTLER. And on the use that is given the ship. Mr. FOSS. Yes, on the use of the ship; how much she is in commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. There results naturally from the ship being used in the ordinary way during the year certain wear and tear that has to be repaired every so often?

Mr. FOSS. Ves Mr. STAFFORD. Can not the gentleman give any idea as to the amount yearly that would be required to meet the ordinary wear and tear?

Mr. FOSS. I could not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee has never received any information from the department as to what would be considered necessary to keep a battle ship in condition each year?

Mr. FOSS. No; it depends on so many circumstances, upon her use, that it is impossible to tell; but the department has sent us a special document here, Document No. 1152, and also a supplementary document, 1306, in which the department estimates on the repairs for these ships specifically.

Mr. STAFFORD. Following the suggestion of the gentle-an's colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bur-LER], that it varies with the use of the ship, I suppose that by reason of the tour around the world of our Atlantic Squadron the repairs to the fleet when it returns home will be much in excess of the ordinary and will require large sums of money to put the fleet again into commission.

Mr. FOSS. One can not tell anything about that until the ships get home.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not tell as to the

Mr. FOSS.

Mr. STAFFORD. But arguing from general principles, the ships being in continual use they will require much more repairs than they otherwise would. Mr. FOSS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. STAFFORD. And particularly having been away from navy-yards for the ordinary repairs during that period.

Mr. FOSS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This provision carries an appropriation of $4,154,500 for the repairs of vessels. How much was carried last year for the same purpose—that is, for the purpose of repairing other

Mr. FOSS. I do not recall the amount.
Mr. TAWNEY. My recollection is that it is between four and five millions or about five millions.

Mr. FOSS. Here it is-$5,788,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. So that in two years we will have appropriated about $100,000,000 for the reconstruction of vessels?

Mr. FOSS. Well, I will not say "reconstruction."

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, repairs that are in excess of $200,000

Mr. FOSS.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to call the attention of the committee to this fact. I have gone through this report, Document The supplementary document I did not receive, although I sent for it. The first vessel on which it is proposed to expend in excess of $200,000 is the Maine. The amount to be expended in the reconstruction of the Maine is $520,000. the Maine was commissioned December 22, 1902, only six years

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit just one word there?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PADGETT. That $520,000 is in addition to $200,000 authorized in the bill of last year.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was going to inquire whether or not we had appropriated about $200,000 for the Maine last year. That makes $720,000 we are appropriating for the repair or reconstruction of a vessel that has not been in commission to exceed six years.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir. Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman give us the information as to by whom the Maine was built?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not tell the gentleman where the Maine was built or who built it.

Mr. BUTLER. It was built at Philadelphia by the Cramps. The new Maine, does the gentleman inquire about?

Mr. SABATH. Yes. Mr. BUTLER. The new Maine was built at the Cramps' shipyard, Philadelphia, nine or ten years ago.

Mr. SABATH. In 1902.

1902, seven years ago. Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. SABATH. So it has been in commission about six years. She was commissioned December 22, 1902, TAWNEY. just about six years ago. The next vessel is the Missouri. The amount estimated for the repair or reconstruction during the fiscal year 1910 of this vessel is $540,000. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if there were any appropriations made at the last session of Congress for the repair of the Missouri?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. Mr. TAWNEY. The Missouri was commissioned December 1, The Missouri has been in commission only five years, and now in order to repair or reconstruct her we are asked to appropriate $540,000, or over a half million dollars. The next vessel The amount estimated to be appropriated for the is the Ohio. Ohio is $540,000, and the Ohio was originally commissioned October 4, 1904, only four years ago. The Wisconsin, $380,000, and she was commissioned February 4, 1901. Then there are six vessels of the Chattanooga class which require overhauling durvessels of the Chattanooga class which require overhauling during the fiscal year 1910. They were commissioned on the following dates: The Chattanooga, October 11, 1904; the Cleveland, November 2, 1903; the Denver, May 17; 1904; the Des Moines, March 5, 1904; the Galveston, February 15, 1905, less than three years ago; and the Tacoma, January 30, 1904.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY Vos

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, Mr. BATES. The gentleman from Minnesota is aware that these vessels have been in active commission ever since then?

Mr. TAWNEY. These I last named; yes.

Mr. BATES. Is the gentleman aware that vessels in active use need to be repaired not only once in five years, but every year?

Mr. TAWNEY. They may need such repairs as they would ordinarily need if the vessels have been properly constructed in the first place. There is the ordinary wear and tear necessary on the vessel, and this provision was put in the naval appropriation two years ago for the purpose of bringing to Congress information as to the amount of money that was being expended annually in the reconstruction of our navy, and now it tran-

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if these repairs are to the hulls or the machinery of the vessels?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Both.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will read the memoranda in Document No. 1152.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will not the gentleman finish about these

Mr. TAWNEY. I will answer the gentleman from Iowa first. I will read the memoranda in House Document 1152 contained in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

Mainc.—General overhauling under all bureaus, including the installation of new boilers by the Bureau of Steam Engineering and the work in connection therewith under the other bureaus; modifications of the battery and magazines to bring them into accord with the present practice; general overhauling and renewal, where necessary, of the electric plant; installing ammunition hoists and other turret fittings to bring the vessel into accord with current practice; miscellaneous alterations and improvements absolutely necessary for the safety and efficiency of the vessel.

Much of the money appropriated for the repair of this vessel will not be expended for repair, but in new improvements made necessary by the change of policy in connection with the construction and operation of these vessels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a minute? Mr. TAWNEY. I have answered the question of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and I will now answer the question of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OLCOTT. Is not some of the money expended because of the advance in the science of naval architecture?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir. Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Is it not true that a very large percentage of the repairs that are necessary, especially to machinery, results from the fact that there are no engineers in the navy, that there are no competent men in charge of the vast machinery of one of these great ships?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am informed, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, that much of the deterioration in the machinery of our naval vessels is due to the inefficiency of the men who are in charge of that machinery. I can not, however, state it as a fact, but that is my information.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true, as a matter of fact, that all of this vast machinery is in charge of warrant officers alone?

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand that is a fact.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Are they not graduates of the academy at Annapolis?

Mr. HEPBURN. Undoubtedly; but the gentleman will remember that a few years ago one-half of the cadets at the Naval Academy were educated as engineers, to be in charge of the machinery of these great vessels. A few years ago a change was made, and that part of the education of the cadets ceased to be given, and we now have no engineers of that

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to my colleague that such is not my understanding. My understanding is simply to put in, first, line officers. All cadets are educated in engineering, and those that are especially adapted to the engineering course are

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not wish to be diverted here entirely from what I intended to call attention to. The item of over $4,000,000 is for repair on vessels where the repair exceeds $200,000. In addition to that, this same paragraph carries an appropriation for repairs of $8,979,144.

Mr. FOSS. No; not in addition. The other is only a limitation of that.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It includes the $4,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not have time to read it. The total, then, for the reconstruction and repair of naval vessels is almost ten million, in addition to the new construction authorized, which amounts to $15,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. That is not pertinent to the discussion.

Mr. TAWNEY, I understand, but it shows what we are paying for construction, both new construction and reconstruction. Until two years ago the reconstruction of these vessels was effected by the use of appropriations made generally to the various bureaus of the department, without Congress knowing what we were paying for reconstruction; and it was upon my motion two years ago, I think it was, that an amendment was placed on the naval appropriation bill requiring specific estimates where the expenditure for repairs exceeded $200,000. And now we find that the reconstruction, aside from the ordinary repairs, is costing the Government of the United States at the rate of about $5,000,000 a year, and on vessels, too, Mr. Chairman, not yet in commission to exceed an average of four and a half years. If we are going to continue our present policy in respect to a greater navy, where will we ultimately of all these battle ships. I think the gentleman has had some land when the vessels now being authorized are commissioned and placed in service, when it will require anywhere from two million to four or five million dollars every few years to reconstruct them? I wanted to call attention to the enormous expenditure for the reconstruction of vessels outside of the ordinary repairs on vessels that have not been in commission to exceed four or five years.

It is a reconstruction, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Navy himself, of parts of the vessel, not a reconstruction of the entire vessel-a reconstruction made necessary by the advance in naval architecture, a science that has, it is claimed, advanced more rapidly in this country in the last few years than any other science; and it is only another argument, Mr. Chairman, why we should go a little slower in the matter of building up and extending our navy by the authorization of enormous battle ships.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. COX of Indiana. What would the gentleman suggest to remedy the evil?

Mr. TAWNEY. Stop building ships for a little while, and reconstruct those that we have, in accordance with the present views of advanced naval architecture.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I agree with the gentleman.
Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, only a word. I think there was a misapprehension as to the nature of the authorization. In answer to a question by the gentleman from Michigan to the chairman of the committee, he stated that the sums were largely for repairs. That is hardly true. The repairs alone would amount to a comparatively small amount of money to be expended on the several ships. But the bill does provide exactly how and for what purpose these several appropriations to the several ships is to be applied. Reading from the provision:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make expenditures from the appropriate funds of the various bureaus for repairs and changes on the vessels herein named in an amount not to exceed the amount specified for each vessel, respectively, as follows:

Then follow the names, mentioning the Maine, the Missouri, and so on. So these large sums are to be expended not for repairs alone, but very largely for changes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Reconstruction.
Mr. KEIFER. Changes to be made in these vessels. The gentleman from Minnesota says reconstruction. That may be the same thing as changes. The great advance in discoveries in the highest class of battle ships made in recent years makes it necessary that we should make changes in all these ships, and therefore it is necessary that large sums of money be appropriated for that purpose. Now, I am not able to tell when we are ever going to be through with inventions and discoveries to improve battle ships, in armor, and so forth, whatever it may be; but if we are going to keep abreast of the nations of the world that have navies, we will have to keep our ships that we built a few years ago up to the highest standard, or they will have to go out of commission, and I think these appropriations are wise.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?
Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.
Mr. TAWNEY. I want to call your attention, and the attention of Members of the House and members of the committee, to the way in which the estimates for these changes and the reconstruction of different parts of vessels are made. We appropriated for reconstruction and repair of one vessel in the last session of Congress. A board of survey condemned the boilers in that vessel and bids or proposals were invited for new boilers. When the proposals were received and the bids were opened, for some reason unknown to me, at least, the department concluded that it was not necessary to put in new boilers, and they refused or rejected all the bids. They determined that they would continue the use of these boilers for some time to come, showing that there had been no thorough investigation as to the condition of the boilers prior to the time the authorization for new boilers was asked, or else the proposal which was the lowest was not satisfactory to the department.

Mr. KEIFER. That speech, which I am willing to adopt, supposing the gentleman was going to ask a question, is a criticism upon the way the money is expended and does not reach the question of the wisdom of the expenditure of money in the matter of repairs and changes of these battle ships.

I was going to suggest that I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] is mistaken when he says, without qualification, as I understood him, that there are no competent engineer officers in charge of the boilers and machinery of these great battle ships. I do not think there is any such condition on a single one of them. There may be certain warrant officers having special charge of certain parts or several of them, but misinformation on that subject. The midshipmen at the Naval Academy are all educated, and they are expected to be highly educated in engineering of that character. Their education is of the kind that specially qualifies them as competent engineers to take charge of the complicated machinery of our battle

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has it in his mind that the machinery of these battle ships and cruisers is in the hands of men who are incompetent. I think that the gentleman from Iowa may, perhaps, draw his conclusion or his query may arise because in these days engineering is not taught as a specialty in the Naval Academy. Gentlemen will remember that prior to 1899 the profession of engineering was given great attention by the United States Government. The gentleman will remember that in the year 1899 Congress passed a law, known as the "personnel act," by which the line and the staff of the navy—the part of the staff including the Engineer Corps—were consolidated.

If the gentleman from Iowa will give me his attention a few minutes, I will state to him that since the passage of that law the curriculum at the Naval Academy has changed. All the young men appointed there now are taught mechanical engineer-was one of the men who advocated the consolidation. am willing now, in the presence of my colleagues, to admit I believe I made a mistake. I believe this is the day of specialty, and I believe that the men who have charge of this machinery ought to have charge of it alone and not be taken from the engine room to stand watch on deck. I advocated, in 1899, that this consolidation might take place, and this is one of the effects of the consolidation. At the Naval Academy in these days the young men are taught engineering as well as seamanship. The same course of study is given to all the young men, while prior to 1899 they were taught engineering specially. They were specially educated for this service, their proficiency was reported to the department, and those who made the best marks at the academy were given preference, I understand, by assignment to the Engineer Corps—not civil, but mechanical engineering corps.

Now, I desire to say to my friend the best information we can obtain satisfies us that the machinery on the ships is still in good condition.

I believe it to be the intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs to find out whether, after this long journey around the world has been concluded, the machinery is still in good con-We intend, further, to ascertain who has had charge of this machinery. From this we can learn much of the effect of the consolidation of 1899. It is true that a good deal of its operation is in the hands of the warrant machinist. He is a man without the technical education that the young men receive at Annapolis. In this day, when the specialist is in demand, when he is employed because of his skill specialized, I believe it is impossible to include in that list line officers of the United States Navy graduated since 1899. The study is too great, the curriculum too long. Too much time must be employed in covering all the different subjects, and the boy can not specialize. He leaves his books a combination of sailor and engineer.

These warrant machinists need no defense. While they do not have the technical education received at these schools, yet, in my judgment, they compose one of the most important classes of men in the United States Navy. They are practical men. They are employed by the Department after having been subjected to a severe test. They must show that they have had long experience in charge of machinery. Their's is what I might call a process of promotion and graduation. When a man enlists in the navy as a mechanic, he is given, I believe, the grade of machinist; and after years of service, if he can show his efficiency he is promoted and warranted and paid quite a respectable sum, perhaps $1,500 or $1,800 a year.

The control of the engine room is still in the hands of a graduate of Annapolis; but the practical management of the machinery is, I am told, largely in the hands of the warrant The question is whether or not the officer who has machinist. control of the discipline of the engine room, and who has imposed on him the responsibility for the careful management of the machinery, has had sufficient education, sufficient time in his preparation to qualify himself, as he did heretofore. I doubt it. Does my friend from Iowa desire to ask me any questions?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I simply want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that since 1899, since competent men were taken away from the charge of the engines, and the Navy Department concluded to do without competent engineers in the charge of its vast machinery, the item for repairs of boilers and machinery in these vessels has very greatly increased?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be extended five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I can not answer the gentleman with the precision that I know he always demands in answer to his questions. We know that the expenditures on repairs on these ships have greatly increased in recent years. We believe, however, that is because of the greater service of the ships, and because there is more machinery and perhaps more delicate machinery, machinery that has been improved by skillful men, which is being tried by the department. More repairs are necessary, because there are more ships to repair. answer the gentleman's question definitely, but it will be the purpose of this committee to ascertain whether or not he is right in his belief.

I would not, however, want the gentleman to conclude that the machinery is in the hands of incompetent men. While their competency should be conceded, my friend and I will agree that the efficiency of a man may be increased by specializing.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.
Mr. TAWNEY. Do you make any distinction between theoretical competency and practical competency?

I believe in a practical competency. I be-Mr. BUTLER. lieve that the ability of a man to manage machinery and to do all the technical work incident thereto may be acquired by practice. And it is the observation of the gentleman from Minnesota, as well as my own, that there are many men in important positions in life, where a technical knowledge is required to enable them to do their work well, who have never received a technical education at an institution where such education is offered. Men have done well on practical lines, and I know that it is the purpose of the department in procuring warrant machinists to procure the very highest possible skill. I do know that in this day, where engineers are employed to manage and care for machinery in great industrial establishments, they are usually asked for certificates showing from what institutions they graduated that the employers may know the amount and extent of the theoretical knowledge which the applicant is likely to possess.

Mr. MACON. In view of the views advanced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] the other day, when he stated that he had a dentist in his town, a born dentist, does not the gentleman think that we also have born machinists and born engineers?

Mr. BUTLER. If I were going to have a tooth pulled, I would rather have it pulled by an unborn dentist than by one already born, because it would not hurt so much. [Laughter.]
Mr. MACON. But does not he think that engineers are largely persons born with that kind of a taste for machinery?

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with the gentleman that men are naturally born to do special duties.

Mr. MACON. Born machinists? Mr. BUTLER. Yes; men that h Mr. BUTLER. Yes; men that have an inclination to handle machinery, and the Navy Department is in search for just such men; and before these machinists are warranted and given important duties they are required to take a technical examination and to show their exact fitness, and this much this whole House can prove.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman tell the House what was the original cost of these five vessels requiring $210,000 each for repair?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman has asked me a question that will stump me. If the gentleman will permit the Clerk to turn to the records, he can perhaps give him the information. They were expensive ships; they were built at a time when we had perhaps to do more guessing than now; they were built six or eight years ago. The ships referred to are not armored ships, they are not armored cruisers, they are not scouting cruisers, but ships kept in motion most of the time, just as my friend would understand an all-day wagon run every day in the week and Sundays, and thus they require more repairs. I do not know whether the estimates for repairs are extravagant or not. It is impossible, much as we may desire to learn, for us civilians, who have no particular training along these lines, to raise a dispute with those better educated over the estimate for repairs upon the ships. We have set the amount beyond which the department can not exceed for the

Mr. COX of Indiana. Up to this time the gentleman understands that I am not quarreling with him?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I am simply trying to get the original cost of these ships for information.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A war ship costs $10,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. These are not large war ships to which the gentleman calls attention.

Mr. TAWNEY. We can not get at the original cost, I will say to the gentleman. The original cost continues and is constantly changing.

Mr. SABATH. And increases from day to day.

Mr. BUTLER. As nearly as I can work out this list of figures, the Galveston originally cost $1,736,774.23. The Tacoma cost $1,398,781.75. These are what are known as "protected cruisers." They have no side armor, but they have a sort of protected deck, a deck which is covered with steel, as I am told by those who do know the purpose of which is a protection. told by those who do know, the purpose of which is a protection serving to keep the shells of the enemy out of the engine room.

Therefore they are called "protected cruisers."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the question of my colleague from Iowa indicates that the course at Annapolis is not now-developing officers of the navy competent to take charge of this complicated machinery, and the answers of the members of the Naval Committee I think fully justifies the conclusion of my colleague from Iowa. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that this somewhat startles me. I was under the impression that the course of instruction at the Naval Academy was thorough in this line of mechanical engineering, and that they graduated these cadets competent to take charge of all the machinery of a great war vessel.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman will recall the fact that at all technical schools—the Boston School of Technology, the school at Cornell and in Chicago, and in other institutions where mechanics are taught four years are required on this one branch alone, and I am told that it is the purpose of the institutions to increase it one year more and make the term five years in order to turn out what they understand is a first-class theoretical cadet, and that after they have been through another college.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the condition of affairs in the war ships, before the consolidation of the staff and the line and its management, was substantially the same as now. They then had the so-called "warrant officers," who did the large amount of the practical work in the engine room, commissioned officers having charge. It has not been very long since an eminent naval officer—I think it was Admiral Melville in a magazine article stated that the battles of the future on the sea would be largely fought in the engineer room below the decks. I think probably that is true, and it seems to me—and all I desire now is to call the attention of the country to the fact, if it is a fact—that this great school at Annapolis training officers to take charge of our ships not only above the deck, but below the decks, should have its course so adjusted as to insure to the country the best service in the engine room as well as above it; and I believe from my knowledge of the officers that they are competent to do that, and for one Member of this House I am not willing to concede that the Naval Academy does not turn out trained officers who are competent from the bridge to the engine room to command every part of these great war vessels. I do not believe these repairs are made necessary because of a deterioration in the officers of the navy, but that they are necessary because of the great use that is made of the war ships. It may not be necessary to expend this amount. It is largely an estimate on the part of the officers of the Government as well as the Naval Committee. No one can figure absolutely and accurately what will be necessary to repair a ship until it is put upon the ways. You can make an estimate that will approximate it, and, as I understand it, the Naval Committee in this matter has simply gone to the point of putting in the bill what they believe is ample, and putting it as a limitation on the total cost for each vessel.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise for Congress to require the Navy Department to report to Congress annually the expenditure of appropriations made on these vessels for the purpose of ascertaining the manner in which that expenditure was made, and the purpose for which it was made?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes; but that does not affect this bill. I rise in my place only to correct what I believe will go out to the country as a misapprehension of the real condition of affairs at our Naval Academy and in our navy. I believe as a man that knows no more about it than any other man here, except as I have been interested in these questions probably more than some, that our naval officers to-day are as competent, as able, and as faithful in the discharge of all their duties as they were before the personnel bill passed.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the curriculum at West Point requires each student to study engineering.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not a fact that before a student goes into the Engineer Corps he is given four years' additional technical instruction?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. BUTLER. Is he given any additional instruction?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The students graduating highest are put in the Engineer Corps-the men who graduate at the head of their class. The number that is taken is governed by the necessities of the corps the year the class graduates. It has been as low as one and it has been as high as seven. After they are assigned there they are commissioned in the Engineer Corps; they are given a thorough electrical course of two years' study, but they are engineer officers all the time, and my understanding is the authorities can take the same class of students at Annapolis, take the highest class, in whatever number is needed for the engineer work of the navy and assign them as engineers; that they then go on shipboard for two years more, and there they complete the course in engineering.

Mr. TALBOTT. We do not educate the boys in steam engineering at West Point.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Of course not. The gentleman knows more about Annapolis than I do.

Mr. TALBOTT. We do not educate them in steam engineering. An engineer in the army is altogether different from an engineer in the navy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Altogether different; there is no parallel between them at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman how the cost of these repairs in time of peace compare with the repairs of ships that came out of the Spanish war?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We did not have anything to do with anything but transports. They are entirely a different ship and no comparison can be instituted at all. We have rebuilt nearly all of our transports since we bought them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did we use transports during the civil war?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes. We bought a whole lot of freighters in the Spanish war—old vessels—and converted them into transports.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOSS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois,

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is in the mind, certainly not in the mouth, of any of us to criticise these gentlemen who command these ships. They are good Americans and are well trained for their duties, and when put to the test, whatever that test may be, they will be equal to it. What I have endeavored to say to the committee was this, that I doubt whether or not in four years, having all the duties to perform that they have assigned them at Annapolis, they could qualify themselves as engineers as well as though they had spent four years in the pursuit of that one study alone. When a young man graduates at Annapolis and aspires to become a a young man graduates at Annapons and aspires to become a constructing engineer or a naval constructor, if designated by the department, he is sent to some school by the Government, so that he may have a chance in three or four years to especially equip himself. My idea is that those gentlemen, who graduate at Annapolis who desire to become engineers, ought to have the same opportunity afforded them, and we will ask Congress to listen to us some day along this line.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago when the gentleman from Ohio was addressing the committee on the subject of the repair of naval vessels I interrupted him and called attention to the carelessness with which estimates for these repairs are made. I cited from memory an instance which was brought to my attention when the present session of Congress began. Since then I have had handed to me the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs, which verify the statement that I made; not only verify my statement, but show the conditions to be even worse than I had supposed they were. I read from the hearings, on page 191:

Mr. PADGETT. In the last appropriation bill we authorized a large amount of money for repairs on certain named ships, and among them $600,000 for the Alabama. Was that amount expended on the Ala-

Commander Griffin. I do not think a dollar has been expended yet.

Mr. Paddett. Why?

Commander Griffin. She has just returned from her trip around the world, and a general survey has just been held on the ship. In fact, the report has not yet been made to the department. The authorization for work on her involves an estimated expenditure of $175,000 under the Bureau of Steam Engineering, the remainder being under the other bureaus. No action has been taken on the survey.

Now, this appropriation was made and submitted a year ago to the Committee on Naval Affairs for $600,000 to repair the Alabama, when there had been no survey made. I had supposed a survey had been made, but it seems there was no survey made.

r. PADGETT. Was a survey made before this estimate for $600,000 submitted and the appropriation procured at the last session of trees ?

Mr. Padgett. Was a survey made before this estimate for $000,000 was submitted and the appropriation procured at the last session of Congress?

Commander Griffin. No, sir; not to my knowledge. I should say that no general survey had been held, but the estimates were made up from expenditures for work of a similar character on other ships. For instance, we had a general survey on the Oregon and on the Massachusetts and Indiana, all battle ships, and I suppose the estimates—
Mr. Padgett (interrupting). Do I understand that you make a survey on the Oregon, and you ask then $600,000 for the Alabama?

Commander Griffin. Not the same as the estimate for the Oregon necessarily, because the conditions differ materially in different ships, but they would be based largely on the character of work found necessary in another ship of that type.

Mr. Padgett. Do I understand that the department or the bureaus will ask Congress and this committee for an appropriation of $600,000 for a specific ship without making an investigation or survey of that ship to know what is best and what is needed?

Commander Griffin. We know from the reports that come from the ship. For instance, in the Bureau of Steam Engineering we have quarterly reports that give the condition of the machinery and we keep a record showing the general wear and tear, so that we can tell at any time just what the condition of the machinery is.

Mr. Padgett. Just at that point: Were not bids advertised for for the new boilers for the Alabama?

Commander Griffin. Two.

Mr. Padgett. How many bids were received?

Commander Griffin. Two.

Mr. Padgett. As a matter of fact, have not both of those bids been rejected and the department determined not to put in new boilers for the present, because they said that the present boilers are good and sufficient?

Commander Griffin. So far as the Bureau of Steam Engineering has any knowledge of the matter, the department has not so decided,

Commander Griffin. So far as the Bureau of Steam Engineering has any knowledge of the matter, the department has not so decided, but I think, from conversation with members of the Board of Inspection and Survey, that that will be the decision of the department; at any rate, it will be the recommendation of the Board of Inspection and Survey.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. TAWNEY. Just two minutes more. Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize this fact that here we are appropriating money on estimates submitted by the department amounting, for the repair or reconstruction of vessels, to over $9,000,000, when we have here the fact which conclusively proves that the estimates are not based on any tangible evidence of the necessity for the repairs. In this particular case, after we had given them the money to repair the Alabama and they had invited proposals for the placing of new boilers in that vessel, they found out they did not need any new boilers at all, and there-fore rejected both bids which were received for the purpose of putting in new boilers. How many more of these vessels we have appropriated for and are to-day appropriating for are to be repaired upon the same basis there is no evidence. not find from the hearings that the committee has made any investigation as to what the basis of these estimates was or whether a survey had been made in advance. Here is a vessel on a trip around the world when we were appropriating $600,000 for her repair, and I hope that when these estimates for reconstruction and repairs are hereafter made that they will be based upon the condition of the vessel as found after a careful investigation or surveyed by a competent board.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a word or so about this subject of repairs. Reports are continually received here from the ships, wherever they are, as to their condition, and these estimates are made up from those reports. If we waited until the ships came into port and then had a survey and then sent an estimate to Congress, we might have to wait a whole year before we could begin any repairs upon these ships. Now, the chiefs of these bureaus, the Bureau of Construction and Repair and the Bureau of Steam Engineering, know, and it has been their experience, that every four or five years we have to have a general overhauling of our ships in order to bring them up to a high state of efficiency, and they know in round numbers how much it will cost to make that overhauling.

Gentlemen have objected to $500,000 for a general overhauling of the battle ship Ohio, a ship that cost $6,000,000. Is that too much? Is there a machine shop in the land anywhere upon which there has not been expended during the last four or five years at least 10 per cent of the cost of the machine shop? Any man who knows anything about manufacturing, and the gentle-man from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] himself knows something about machinery, I understand—
Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. FOSS (continuing). Knows that in every manufacturing plant and machine shop there is expended anywhere from 5 to 10 per cent every year upon machines, upon repairs, upon overhauling, and upon reconstruction, as the gentleman is pleased to call it

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman mean to say that these repairs are not necessary? Will he put his opinion against the naval experts in our navy?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will put my opinion against such a naval expert as made an estimate a year ago for the repairs of the Alabama; yes. I want to say further, in reply to the gentle-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] yield? Mr. FOSS.

Mr. FOSS. I will yield for a question, that is all.
Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). That my objection was not to the ordinary repairs to these vessels; but here is an item for the repair of the Ohio, $545,000, which means more than ordinary repairs. It means a reconstruction of a vessel that has been in commission less than four years. It is the time that the vessel has been in commission and the amount that is appropriated now for reconstruction that I object to.

Five hundred thousand dollars on a vessel that Mr. FOSS.

cost $6,000,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. How much has been spent on her every year, in addition to the $500,000?

Mr. FOSS. Very little.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to know.

Mr. FOSS. I have not got it; but this is a general overhauling of the ship, and every ship has to be generally overhauled every four or five years, and 10 per cent on the cost of the ship is a very small amount, in my judgment, for the overhauling

The gentleman speaks about reconstruction as though we were building the ship all over, as though the constructors down here will build her all over from top to bottom. I do not wish any such notion as that to enter the minds of gentlemen here. There is no reconstruction of the hull. There is no reconstruction of the great material part of the vessel. There are changes in the ammunition hoists, changes in the magazines, new boilers required, perhaps, and the internal fittings-those things which are made necessary because of the constant use of the ship, or made necessary by reason of new improvements. And, as has been stated, the science of naval architecture and naval construction has advanced perhaps more than any other science during the last ten or twenty years.

Now, I have not anything more to say about the subject of repairs. We have got to take the opinions of our naval experts, and not the opinions of gentlemen upon this floor, unless they have shown themselves specially qualified as naval experts to inform and enlighten the House.

On the subject of engineers, I desire to state that I had something to do with the passage of the bill consolidating the Engineer Corps and the Line of the navy. I do not stand here to-day to confess my sins, as does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Unless a mistake can be construed as a sin, I did not make any confession of sin, because I did not violate any moral, physical, or temporal law. I say I was misled by men like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], who ought to have known better. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSS. I simply say that by way of pleasantry. Mr. BUTLER. All right; I will so accept it.

Mr. FOSS. Simply by way of pleasantry to the gentleman. There is a difference of opinion on this question. I stand here and say to-day I believe that the consolidation between the Engineer and Line Corps was a good thing for the American Navy. I stand here to say that I believe the engines are well cared for and watched over by our naval officers to-day, and that our ships are performing their duties as well as they ever did before. I am not here to put my opinion against the opinion of any other gentleman on the floor of this House; but I want to say to you that it is the opinion of officers of the navy that this consolidation was a good thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Just one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for one moment. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FOSS. What is the best evidence upon this subject, the best witness to call? We had Admiral Evans before our committee the other day, a man who has been in command of the Atlantic Fleet, that took it from Hampton Roads to Magdalena Bay; and the question came up there as to whether the consolidation which Congress authorized ten years ago was a good thing or not. My distinguished colleague upon the committee [Judge BUTLER] said to Admiral Evans:

I feel a mistake was made in the consolidation. Admiral Evans. You think the consolidation was not good?

Mr. Butler. I do; although I assisted in bringing it about.
Admiral Evans. I think it is the best thing that could have been done. When I got to California, without any engineers, my fleet was in better condition than when it started.

And it is the opinion of our naval officers, in command of our fleet and ships, that this consolidation has been a splendid thing for the navy, because it makes the man in command of the ship the master of the ship, a man who understands all the workings of the ship. Before, the command of the ship was in the hands of the engineer. We had to make a change in the curriculum of the Naval Academy, whereby the officer or midshipman there must acquire a knowledge of engineering, and by further adding to that the experience which he must obtain in the engine room as a watch officer. By reason of these facts, the entire ship is today under command of an engineer officer, a man who understands all the duties of engineering, and who is complete master of the ship.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not anything further to say; but I will call witnesses from the American Navy, the men who have sailed the ships and commanded them, upon this question as to whether or not this consolidation was not a good thing for the American Navy. Why, sir, the magnificent performance of our fleet, sailing around the world as it is to-day, is the pride of every American and the envy of every naval power on the face of the globe. Let me say to you that there have been no repairs upon those ships. They have not entered into any navy-yard, and what repairs have been made have been made by the men on the ships themselves, which is abundant testi-mony to the fact that our navy to-day in all its different parts, in the engineer department, as well as in every other department, is an efficient navy and doing its work splendidly and well.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL ACADEMY.

Pay of professors and others, Naval Academy: One professor as head of the department of physics, $3,600.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply for the purpose of getting information. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to these professors. What proportion of them are from civil life?

Mr. FOSS. Well, all of these we have here are from civil life. This professor is at the head of the department of physics. He has been there for thirty-five or forty years. That is Professor Terry

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In regard to the professors at the Naval Academy, is it the gentleman's opinion that it is as good administration to have professors from civil life teaching the cadets as it would be to have naval officers detailed, and receiving the title of professor, who are thoroughly familiar with the whole course of instruction to make a commander of our

Mr. FOSS. There is a desire in the Navy Department to have naval officers down there, but the committee has been more or less in favor of retaining the civil professors there. Some of them have been there a great many years and have shown their proficiency, and we are in favor of their retention.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. With the number of cadets graduated, it seems to me that we will soon have a very large number of naval officers, and unless they can be utilized in this line of work they will be put on the supernumerary list. We are graduwork they will be put on the superindictary list. We are grand-ating double classes at the Naval Academy each year, and will at least until 1911. Now, I will say to the gentleman that at the Military Academy the army prefers, and have always kept in all cases except the master of swords, the professors from the army, and hereafter when the master of the swords retires that officer is to be selected from officers of the army. teachers of French and Spanish they prefer from civil life. It is not an education in the line of the ordinary academy. It is for a specialized department of work, and it seems to me, both as a matter of economy and as a matter of better instruction, the naval officer graduated by thorough training as he reaches further along would be better qualified for this work than these professors from civil life.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. For French and Spanish and mathematics

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mathematics altogether in the military classes. The teachers are graduates. I withdraw the motion. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as IOHOWS:

One sword master, at $1,500; 1 assistant, at $1,200, and 2 assistants, at $1,000 each; 1 instructor in gymnastics, at $1,200; 1 assistant librarian, at $1,800; 1 cataloguer, at $1,100; 2 shelf assistants, at $900 each; one secretary of the Naval Academy, at $1,800; 5 clerks, at $1,200 each; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 writers, at $720 each; 1 clerk at $1,440; 1 dentist, at $1,600; 1 baker, at $600; 1 mechanic in department of physics, at $730; 1 mechanic in the department of ordnance, at $951.52; 1 mechanic in the department of ordnance, at $751.20; 1 messenger to the superintendent, at $600; 1 armorer, at $649.50; 1 chief gunner's mate, at $529.50; 3 quarter gunners, at $469.68 cents each; 1 coxswain, at $469.50; 3 seamen in the department of seamanship, at $337.50 each; 25 attendants at recitation rooms, library, store, chapel, armory, gymnasium, and offices, at $300 each; 1 bandmaster, at $1,200; 21 first-class musicians, at $420 each; 7 second-class musicians, at $360 each; services of organist at chapel, $300; 1 assistant instructor in gymnastics, $1,000; 4 clerks, $900 each; 1 assistant baker, $540; 1 mechanic in department of physics, $720; 4 cooks, at $600 each; 2 instructors in physical training, at $1,500 each; 2 electrical machinists in department of physics, $1,000 each; 1 chief cook, $1,200; 1 steward, $1,200; 1 assistant steward, $600; 1 head waiter, $720; 2 assistant head waiters, at $480 each, $960; 2 pantry men, at $420 each, $840; 1 assistant baker, $420; 2 assistant cooks, at $300 each, $2,400; necessary waiters, at $16 per month each, $13,440; in all, $154,702.76.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the new matter in this paragraph, for the purpose of asking an explanation from the Chairman. On page 45, line 3, I notice that you appropriate for 5 clerks, at $1,200 each, whereas in the last bill only 2 were appropriated for.

Mr. FOSS. They were in different parts of the bill and we have put them together.

Mr. MACON. Is it not a fact that you have done this so as increase their salaries?

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not think their salaries are increased. Mr. MACON. I do not think you can find 5 clerks anywhere in the bill of last year.

Mr. FOSS. Perhaps there has been a little increase. the hearing so states there has been an increase in the Navy Department clerks of about 10 per cent.

Mr. PADGETT. Under executive order.

Mr. FOSS. And there is an increase of 2 clerks.

Mr. MACON. Has the committee authority to increase this force on an appropriation bill?

Mr. FOSS. The 2 were paid from another appropriation—from the contingent fund.

Mr. PADGETT. I will read the note on page 75 of the bill. There you will see, under Note C:

The increase of 5 is caused by a transfer of 3 from another item, which is correspondingly reduced, and by an actual increase of 2 in the total number. The 2 additional are needed in the gymnasium and the sick quarters.

I will also read from the hearings:

I will also read from the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. On page 142 I notice that you are asking for 5 clerks, at $1,200 each, instead of 2; 4 clerks, at $1,000, instead of 1; 2 writers, at $720 each, instead of 1. Please explain those changes. Captain BADGER. I would like to have Professor Dodge answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. All right
Professor DODGE. The current appropriation provides for a secretary and 9 clerks, at an expenditure of $11,660. They are all paid on annual salary. In addition to that, there is now employed, and has been for several years, at the academy 7 clerks paid on a per diem basis from lump appropriations. There is a prohibition in the general deficiency act of last year against the further employment of any people in the classified service on a per diem basis to be paid from lump appropriations after this year unless they are expressly allowed by Congress. We have taken those 7 clerks and put them on a salary, with a total increase of $585.36. There is an apparent increase in this appropriations. They are now brought to this one appropriation and put on an annual-salary basis.

Mr. FOSS. Then I was mistaken about that.

Mr. FOSS. Then I was mistaken about that.

Mr. MACON. You do increase the force.

Mr. PADGETT. There is an increase of 2, because the sick quarters and the new gymnasium require them.

Mr. MACON. Under existing law, has the committee the authority to increase the force on an appropriation bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Not strictly.
Mr. MACON. It was stated here yesterday that the Appropriations Committee was not authorized to do that anywhere except in the departments here in Washington, and I want to know if that is a fact.

Mr. FOSS. We have always added to the number of clerks on the appropriation bill, and the Naval Academy being a separate institution, we have kept that separate and apart from the other.

Mr. MACON. I notice, on page 46, line 5, that you approprite for 4 clerks, at a salary of $900 each, when in the last bill you only appropriated for 1—an increase of 3. Why was that increase necessary?

Mr. PADGETT. It says the increase of 1 is necessary for instruction in the electrical machinery and ship appliances. Is that the one you refer to?

Mr. MACON. I refer to line 5, page 46, where you appropriate for 4 clerks, at $900.

Mr. PADGETT. There have been transfers. They have been consolidated. If you will look in the last bill, you will see that there are others appropriated for, and we have consolidated

Mr. MACON. I do not find any at that price.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The President increased the salaries.

Mr. MACON. Now, I notice, further, in line 8, on the same page, 4 cooks, at $600 each. A year ago you appropriated for

Mr. PADGETT. No; we appropriated for a number of cooks last year, scattered throughout the bill.

Mr. MACON. The bill says 1.

Mr. PADGETT. I know, but if you will read in other parts of the bill-

Mr. MACON. At different salaries. There are some at $300, but here are 4 at $600. Last year you only appropriated for 1

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will look at note E, he will see that there is no increase in the total number. Two items, 1 cook at $600 and 2 cooks at $600, are combined. cook at $325 is omitted and 1 cook at $600 is added, so that there is an increase of $274.50. The number of cooks is not increased, but there is an increase of 1 cook's salary from $325 to $600.

Mr. MACON. Referring again to page 45, line 22, I notice that you appropriate for 25 attendants at recitation rooms, store, chapel, armory, gymnasium, and offices, whereas you only appropriated for 20 for that purpose a year ago. What necessity is there for that increase?

Mr. ROBERTS. There is an actual increase of only 2.

Mr. MACON. The bill shows 5.

Mr. ROBERTS. The apparent increase of 5 is caused by a transfer of 3 from another item, which is correspondingly reduced, and by an actual increase of 2 in the total number. The 2 additional are needed in the new gymnasium and the

Mr. MACON. A moment ago the chairman of the committee stated that the salary of the clerks and other employees at the Naval Academy had been increased 10 per cent by executive order.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; by executive order.
Mr. MACON. Has the President the right to increase salaries under existing law?

Mr. FOSS. He has a right to increase the pay of per diem employees

Mr. MACON. These seem to be annual employees.
Mr. FOSS. They were formerly per diem, but are made annual here. I think my statement was right, that there has been no increase in the number of clerks. I think my colleague on the committee referred to some other matter.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, these increases are all small in amount. It seems that the total increase of appropriations is about $8,794.50. It impresses me very clearly that the salaries have been increased in this paragraph, which is contrary to existing law. But I am not disposed, where the number of increases are small and the increase of salary is small, to interfere with the desire or judgment of the committee, and in this instance I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws his point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of enlisted men, active list: Pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, as prescribed by law; and the number of enlisted men shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders, and including additional compensation for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun pointers, mess sergeants, cooks, messmen, signalmen, or holding good-conduct medals, plns, or bars, including interests on deposits by enlisted men, and the authorized travel allowance of discharged enlisted men and for prizes for excellence in gunnery exercise and target practice, both afloat and ashore, $2.872.270: Provided, That hereafter officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall serve as heretofore on board all battle ships and armored cruisers, and also upon such other vessels of the navy as the President may direct, in detachments of not less than 8 per cent of the strength of the enlisted men of the navy on said vessels.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making a point of order against the proviso just read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make or reserve the point of order?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I will not occupy much time-

I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman. Mr. FOSS.

Mr. KEIFER. One moment. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in support of my point of order that this is a class of legislation that we have never had before, and I think there was only one instance when it was attempted, and that was in the Forty-sixth Congress, when the majority undertook to regulate by law the powers of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States by statute, and then the attempt part of the money was to be expended unless it was used as specified.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

In all, pay, Marine Corps, $4,349,910.28.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It has happened that I have been occupied elsewhere for a large part of the time since the consideration of this bill began, and I am not as familiar with it as I would like to be, nor have I been able to keep up with the discussion of it. I do not know whether there has been any discussion of the recent order of the President with reference to the employment of the Marine Corps. I do understand, however, the recom-mendation of the committee with reference to that corps, and in that decision of the committee I heartily concur as wise and patriotic. Since I have had the honor of serving in this House I have seen the Marine Corps grow from a comparatively insignificant body of men commanded by a colonel, to an important force commanded by a major-general. I have not indorsed that growth of the corps. I have opposed it consistently, year in and year out, because I did not believe it was necessary, because I did not think it was fair to the taxpayers of the country, nor could I be brought to believe that it was necessary for the defense of the integrity and honor of the country.

If I had been convinced that it was necessary for the protection of the country, I would have voted for every increase that has been suggested, and would have supported it indefinitely, in order to secure the integrity and protect the honor of the country. But now that we have the corps, I believe that they should be employed where the Constitution and the laws require that the marines should be used. I believe that it is entirely proper to have them continuously associated with the avy. The corps, as I understand it, was organized in 1775. The marines have done their duty fully and ably as patriotic and brave men. My information is that they have been thanked by Congress on nineteen different occasions for distinguished and gallant service, and I believe that if we are to have the corps at all we ought to have them doing the duty for which they were created. They have been in a way spurned by the navy, and they are not wanted by the army.

Kipling exactly describes the status of the marine:

'E isn't one of the regular line, nor 'e isn't one of the crew, 'E's a kind of a giddy harumfrodite, a soldier and sailor, too!

They seem, according to the view of some people, whom it is not necessary to mention, a military misfit, but be it said to the honor of this corps that they have unfailingly done their duty, and I rejoice at the wisdom of the committee which puts them where they belong. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Total Marine Corps, exclusive of public works, $7,048,310.28.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, in view of the recent order of the President in respect to the service of the Marine Corps, whether the appropriations carried in this bill will be available for the purposes for which they are made, with that service on land instead of on board ships?

Mr. FOSS. The order was not made until after these estimates were made up and sent to the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the order has been made before the appropriations? Mr. FOSS. Yes. We have provided in here for the Marine Corps just as we did last year and the year before.

Mr. TAWNEY. The provisions in this bill are for the Marine Corps used in the navy as heretofore?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the Marine Corps does not serve as heretofore, as it will not if the order of the President is effective, are these appropriations available for the purposes for which they are made?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes; they will be available. There is no question about that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the committee think that it is advisable to change the character of the service of the Marine Corps?

Mr. FOSS. The committee has almost unanimously reported the other way

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Unanimously reported the other

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following was abandoned and a provision in the law resorted to that no amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Insert at the end of line 3, page 59, the following:
"Provided, That no part of the appropriations herein made for the Marine Corps shall be expended for the purposes for which said appropriations are made unless officers and enlisted men shall serve as heretofore on board all battle ships and armored cruisers, and also upon such other vessels of the navy as the President may direct, in detachments of not less than 8 per cent of the strength of the enlisted men of the navy on said vessels."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to continue the service of the Marine Corps as that service has heretofore been employed, and as the Committee on Naval Affairs has unanimously reported it should be. I, personally, do not favor making the Marine Corps an adjunct of the army, as I believe it will become if not continued as a part of the naval force as heretofore. I understand the Milfary Committee of this House is likewise opposed to the Marine Corps becoming a part of the army. Now, this is a limitation on the appropriations carried in this bill for the Marine Corps and, in my judgment, in order as a limitation. I do not use the word "hereafter." It applies only to these particular appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the great objection that I have to it is that it changes the discretion that is lodged at present in the Executive, and it requires the service of marines on ships where they have not been serving up to this time. It never has been the practice to have marines on all of the ships of the class indicated. I call the attention of the committee to the report of Admiral Converse, then Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, for the year 1906, in which he says:

Many of our ships do not carry marines and it has been a matter of deep consideration to the bureau as to whether it would not add to the efficiency of the naval service if the marines were withdrawn from more or all of our vessels.

It may be advisable to carry some marines on some vessels, and inadvisable to carry marines on some other vessels. I do not know who originated this percentage, 8 per cent, but it got so near to being 16 to 1 that I am suspicious about the origin of this peculiar percentage that is required regarding marines and sailors.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. OLCOTT. That percentage was arrived at because that is practically what is done now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might be, but not for the average of ships on which there are marines and on which there are no marines. I believe it unwise, however much it is advisable to have marines on some ships, to have a fixed rule requiring a certain fixed percentage of marines to other men on the vessels. I doubt if this be wise legislation.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask that the amendment be again reported. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. TAWNEY. If there is no objection, the word "all" might be stricken out. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "all" be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "all," so as to read "on battle ships."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think that changes the effect of the amendment at all. I think it will be necessary to con-

Mr. TAWNEY. It is only a question of a mandatory com-and. This leaves discretionary the percentage.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How would that be construed? At present there are no marines on ships.

Several Members. Oh, yes; there are.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought they had all been withdrawn.
Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this point of order. I was out at the time the motion was made to amend, and I understand the point of order has been made and reserved

Mr. TAWNEY. It has been reserved.
Mr. KEIFER. I understand this is an attempt to exercise the power of the legislative branch of the United States to control the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. It is that old attempt of Congress to set up by its legislation a mode of directing the President of the United States in his control of the navy. He is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, made so by express provision of the Constitution of the United States. The amendment would be new legislation. Of course it ought to be treated as unconstitutional legislation. Section 2, Article II, reads:

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States, when called into actual service of the United States.

Perhaps that does not affect the question of order now pend-The provision that it is proposed to have again reinserted would require the President to use the Marine Corps of the navy in a certain way. He would be required to have of ma-navy in a certain way. He would be required to have of marrines at least 8 per cent of the number of sailors or enlisted men, I believe it is, upon a ship.

Mr. TAWNEY. Of enlisted men of the Marine Corps.

Mr. KEIFER. Enlisted men of the navy on each ship. That is a direction as to what the Commander in Chief could do with the Marine Corps. with the Marine Corps. Some gentlemen suggest that it is a limitation. It may be a limitation, in his judgment, if it required 99 per cent of the Marine Corps to serve on board ships, so that at last it would simply be a mode of substituting a legislative act of Congress for the powers of the Commander in Chief of the Navy. If we could make such a limitation, if that is the proper way to characterize it, with reference to the navy in this respect, we could make it in all respects. If we can do that with reference to the navy, we can direct by legis-lation how the army should be moved, where it should be kept on land, in what part of our possessions it should be kept, and how maneuvered and managed in time of peace and in time of war. It is wholly new legislation, in the sense that it is an attempt to legislate, though indirectly, by withholding an appropriation, the powers of the Commander in Chief of the Navy. In about the year 1878 the Forty-sixth Congress undertook to provide by law that the Army of the United States should not be used for the purpose of putting down riots or to keep peace and order on one day of each year, and that election day; and the attempt was then made in the same man-ner that is here attempted—to provide that on the day in the year when an election was being held there should be no money expended through the War Department toward maintaining it—and it grew to be so absurd by the time it was fully discussed that it was abandoned. That was the time when both branches of Congress were Democratic. I have not heard of that proposition since until it came up in this form here as applicable to a navy appropriation.

The point of order, to my mind, Mr. Chairman, should be sustained. There are about 40,000 enlisted men, as I understand it, in the navy, and about 10,000 marines. It is not wise always to intermingle them on the same ships and necessarily at times in the performance of the same duties, and there are many difficulties growing out of the combination of marines and enlisted men in the navy, and of the officers of the two corps of the navy, which I do not care to take the time to specify now.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a decision on the point of order.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman-Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr.

WALDO] is recognized to discuss the point of order.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the point of order is not well taken. The Marine Corps has always been a part of the navy; it has always been used in the navy, and has been a part of the floating or sea force of the United States. It is now proposed to change it to a part of the permanent land force of the army. That is the proposition. This limitation that has been offered in the amendment is to provide that the appropriation we are now making, and one that has been made for years for the navy, shall not be diverted to the land force or the army. That is what the limitation is, and nothing else. It is purely a limitation that this appropriation which we make for the navy shall not be diverted to the land force, and it is clearly in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this proposition was prepared and offered by myself, at the suggestion of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs sitting about me, with the view of accomplishing two things-first, the consideration of the merits of this proposition, and, second, so far as I am con-cerned, with a view, if possible, of continuing the service of the Marine Corps as that service has been used for over a hundred years in our Government.

Mr. BUTLER. One hundred and thirty-three years, without interruption.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as the point of order is concerned, I wish to say, before addressing myself to that, that I want to amend the amendment by striking out all the language after the words "as the President shall direct," so as not to provide for specific direction, but leaving in the words as heretofore. I would like to have the Clerk report the amendment as it will read with that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota TAWNEY] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations herein made for the Marine Corps shall be expended for the purposes for which said appropriations are made unless officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall serve as heretofore, on board battle ships and revenue cruisers and also upon such other vessels of the navy as the President may direct.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that that is clearly a limitation upon the appropriations that are made for this purpose, and, being a limitation, the point of order does not lie against it. I shall not attempt to discuss the matter further. I think the Chair is more familiar with the rule than I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to obtain any enlightenment on the subject. Otherwise, the Chair is prepared

The Constitution of the United States provides, in section 2 of Article II that-

The President shall be the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.

How far Congress itself, through any form of legislation, may interfere with the control of an army or navy created and take away from the President of the United States the power to command it, is not necessary for the Chair now to pass upon. But the rules of the House provide that there shall be no legislation upon appropriation bills. Also the rulings are to the effect that a limitation upon an appropriation bill is in order, and the question for the Chair to determine is whether the mo-tion of the gentleman from Minnesota is, in fact, a limitation upon the appropriation or legislation upon the appropriation

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair proceeds further, so far as I am concerned, I withdraw the point of order to this particular phase of the question.

Mr. Chairman, it will be renewed. Mr. KEIFER.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] withdraws the point of order, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keiffer] renews it.

It seems to the Chair that while the House, under its rules, has authority to prescribe a limitation upon an appropriation, when Congress attempts by limitation to give positive direction to the Executive, it raises a question which has at times been determined in the House. A few years ago there was a question in regard to the form of spelling under an executive order, and upon an appropriation bill this amendment was offered:

No money appropriated in this act shall be used in connection with the printing of documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress, or either branch thereof, unless the same shall conform to the orthography recognized and used by generally accepted dictionaries of the

To that amendment a point of order was made and sustained. Another amendment somewhat similar in character was offered.

and the point of order sustained.

The present occupant of the chair at one time made a ruling to this effect. Under the rule, a limitation is in order. Under the rules, if the amendment in the form of a limitation on the appropriation does not limit the expenditures, but is an affirmative change of law, it is not in order. The Chair thinks this is not a limitation on the expenditure of money, change of law. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order, and the Chair is inclined to think that the present amendment positively directs where the marines shall be used, and whether constitutional or not, that is obnoxious to the rules of the House, and is not a mere limitation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do I understand the Chair to hold that this is a change of existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the Chair refer, then, to the provision in the Constitution?

The Chair thinks it would be a constitu-The CHAIRMAN.

tional question, probably.

Mr. TAWNEY. Because the Constitution clothes the President with the power exclusively of controlling the army and navy in time of peace?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not undertake to say how far Congress may legislate creating an army or as to its disposition under the Constitution, because that question is not before the House.

FOSS. On that point, I desire to read from the Constitution of the United States, which gives Congress the power | to make rules and regulations for the government of the land

Mr. BUTLER. But this says expressly where he may assign the troops.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that, and that that is legislation, which is not a subject to be indulged in through the form of an appropriation bill.

Mr. WALDO. I desire to offer another amendment, following line 3. Insert:

Provided. That no part of this appropriation shall be used for a marine corps no longer used as part of the naval force as heretofore.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, after line 3, insert: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for a marine corps no longer used as part of the naval force as heretofore."

Mr. FOSS. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order. There is no limitation on the appropriation at all about it. It is a proposed amendment which does not prevent the expenditure of the money, but only provides for it being expended in a particular way, and for that particular way it is proposed to legislate, and that is legislation.

Mr. WALDO. It only limits the use of the money to the present purpose for which it has been used for the last hundred years or more.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not similar to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota contained positive directions, which were not a limitation upon the appropriation, but contained practically a change of existing law. The amendment of the gentleman from New York provides:

That no part of the appropriation shall be used for a marine corps no longer used as part of the naval force as heretofore.

It is quite within the power of Congress to make or refuse to make appropriations except upon some condition of this sort. The Chair therefore

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the point I make is that it is no limitation upon the appropriations made in the bill, which will be expended in any event; therefore it is not a limitation upon the appropriation. The money will be expended, but not for this prohibited purpose, and therefore it does not come within any rule of limiting which abridges the amount of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not catch the point of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. The point I make is that a certain sum of money is appropriated in this bill for the maintenance of a marine corps. Now, this proposed amendment is, in effect, to require that money to be expended for certain purposes, but not as provided in this provision; and that is not a limitation upon the appropriation at all, because that money is to be expended, but not for a particular prohibited purpose; and that is legis-The amendment does not reduce the amount of the appropriation, or prohibit any part of it from being expended. It is not a limitation upon the amount of the appropriation at all. I think the distinction is that if an appropriation is not to be used at all unless used in a particular way, it would be a limitation on the appropriation; but if it is to be used otherwise than that stated in the proviso, then it is not a limitation upon the appropriation at all, and subject to a point of order because new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from

New York is:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for a marine corps no longer a part of the naval force as heretofore.

The appropriation for the Marine Corps has not yet been made. It is only in process of being made, and in making an appropriation it is quite within the power of the House to provide a limitation as to its expenditure. The Chair thinks that this is a limitation, just as much as the provision would be that no appropriation shall be used for a marine corps over a certain size. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the gentleman from New York quite understands the significance of that proposal as it strikes some of us here? It seems to leave the President of the United States discretionary power to disband the Marine Corps altogether. I should like to know if the gentleman from New York intended that to be the effect of his proposal?

Mr. WALDO. It does not change his power from what it is at present. It does not give him any more power.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman from New York contend that under existing law, after we have made provision for the Marine Corps and appropriated money for it, the President could disband it of his own motion?

Mr. WALDO. I understand that is the contention in the Brownsville case,

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman admit that is settled law?

Mr. WALDO. I do not say that is law, but that is the contention.

Mr. COCKRAN. By this proposal you would empower the President to do that very thing.

Mr. WALDO. Not at all.

Mr. COCKRAN. It seems to me that under this provision the appropriation is made conditional upon the marines being employed as part of the actual naval establishment.

Mr. WALDO. Certainly. Mr. COCKRAN. If the President failed to employ them as such, then under this provision there would be no appropriation available and therefore no Marine Corps.

Mr. WALDO. They are a part of the army, then. Let the army support them.

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not think there is any statutory provision now that makes them a part of the army. I merely wanted to get at the significance of this proposal. If it be a proposal to give the President discretionary power to abolish the entire Marine Corps, then we can vote upon it with that understanding; but if it be a provision to compel him to maintain the Marine Corps under its former organization, as part of the naval equipment, that is another thing. Whatever may be the intention of the gentleman who offers the proposition, I think it important that the question be placed before the committee so that we can vote on it without any doubt as to what will be accomplished if it be adopted.

Mr. WALDO. When the President uses the Marine Corps as a land force, he dispenses with it as a marine force. Now, if we do not have any Marine Corps, we will not pay for it; that is all.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will my friend from New York permit a question?

Mr. WALDO. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think my usually well-informed and always highly esteemed friend is mistaken in his idea of what was the position of the President with reference to the troops at Brownsville. He did not dismiss an organization. He dismissed units in that organization whom he thought guilty of a crime, and he happened to believe, and properly to believe, I think, that they were all either guilty or had guilty knowledge of it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] if the President, in dismissing those units, did not succeed pretty effectively in dismissing an entire battalion?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The general prevalence of crime in those companies required that it be done.

Mr. WALDO. There was no pretense that there was any crime committed by any of that force except a small portion of it, and no proof of that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I beg to say that I think there was abundant proof.

Mr. WALDO. I have not seen any lawyer who has examined that record who says so.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO] will give me his attention for a minute, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. WALDO. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. There is a large part of the Marine Corps on land at present and serving on land. is this part or is it not a portion of the Navy of the United States? When I say "at present" I mean six months ago.

Mr. WALDO. My understanding is that the President's intention is to do away with the Marine Corps altogether as a marine corps and to make them a land force. Now, I am opposed to that, and I am opposed to appropriating for the navy and then having that navy made a land force. That is all that this limitation goes to. If we want a marine corps, let us have a marine corps. If we want a larger land force, let us increase the army.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this amendment means nothing whatever. The Marine Corps has been serving ashore, a great part of it, and is yet a part of the navy of the United States, and this appropriation will be applicable to it. Also observe the word "heretofore," Heretofore means what is happening at the present day, just as well as what happened a year ago. If that amendment is adopted there is not one single change in the existing state of affairs.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my concurrence in what has just been stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Holding the amendment in my hand, and with its text before me, it is perfectly clear that if it be adopted the House will do nothing except to declare that the law stand as it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. And shall not be changed by the President of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Precisely. It states that no part of the appropriation shall be used for the Marine Corps "not a part of the naval force as heretofore." That is to say, as the Marine Corps was before the adoption of this amendment; that is to say, as the Marine Corps is now, for the amendment is not yet adopted. In effect, we are invited to enact solemnly that "things are as they are, and the law is as it is written." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by WALDO) there were 41 ayes and 41 noes.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 41 and the noes are 41, and the amendment is lost.

Several Members. "One more in the affirmative." "One more in the negative."

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen can not vote after the vote has been announced.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Tellers!

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I make the humble request to know whether or not the amendment is adopted? The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 39 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, tellers were demanded. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the demand for tellers was too late. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 39 for the purpose of offering an amendment which the Clerk will report for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "vessels," line 24, page 39, insert: "Provided further, That hereafter it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof a detailed statement showing the amount expended of the appropriations for repair of every ship where said repairs exceed on any one ship the sum of $200,000 in any one fiscal year."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. I do not object.
The CHAIRMAN. No objection is heard. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, we have now reached that por-tion of the bill known as the "increase of the navy," and we have passed over a few matters to which I desire to go back and take up. Therefore, I will ask that we return to page 13, Bureau of Ordnance and ordnance stores. To that paragraph there is now pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], to which I made a point

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that on yesterday several items and amendments were passed without prejudice, and the gentleman in charge of the bill asks to recur to these items, and the Clerk will report the first item, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, on page 13.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following paragraph, after the word "Navy," line 6, page 14:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of powder made, manufactured, or sold in violation of an act of Congress passed July 2, 1890, being an act entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints of trade and monopolies,' and all amendments made thereto, which powder shall be purchased in accordance and with the conditions submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to all manufacturers, dealers, and sellers of powder, and upon bids received in accordance with the terms and requirements of such proposals as to carry into effect the limitations of this provision. All powder shall conform to the standard prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall receive no bid for the purchase of powder unless the bid is accompanied by an affidavit showing that the powder sought to be sold is not made, manufactured, or offered to be sold in violation of any law passed by Congress."

Mr. FOSS. And to that I make a point of order, and the

Mr. FOSS. And to that I make a point of order, and the point of order is that it is new legislation under the guise of a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make or reserve the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to be heard briefly. I call the Chair's attention to section 4003, in Hinds's Procedure, vol-

A provision that no part of any appropriation for an article should be paid to any trust was held in order as a limitation. On March 1, 1906, the army appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the Clerk read a paragraph making appropriation for the purchase of powder.

Mr. OSCAR W. GILLESPIE, of Texas, offered an amendment:
"After the word 'dollars,' in line 22, page 43, insert: 'Provided, That no part of said $629,000 shall be paid to any trust or combination in restraint of trade nor to any corporation having a monopoly of the manufacture and supply of gunpowder in the United States, except in the event of an emergency."

The Chair held in that case that that was a limitation and was not new legislation upon an appropriation bill. I am unable to see very much material difference, if any, between the amendment I offer and the limitation that was offered by the gentleman from Texas, which I have just read. The limitation offered by the gentleman from Texas provides that no part of the appropriation shall be paid to any trust or person who is doing business in restraint of trade or is engaged in a monopoly of the trade. The amendment which I propose undertakes to prohibit the use of any money sought to be appropriated in the appropriation bill or paid to any person in violation of an act of Congress passed on the 2d day of July, 1890. I do not believe that the amendment which I offer is new legislation, but I believe that it comes within the purview of the ruling of the Chair heretofore-that it is but a mere limitation directing where and how the money sought to be appropriated shall be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is both in substance and in law positive legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, after line 6, amend by adding as a new paragraph: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any trust or combination in restraint of trade, nor to any corporation having a monopoly of the manufacture and supply of gunpowder in the United States, except in the event of an emergency.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of orderthat it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this is an amendment which ought to obtain. I do not know that I desire to supplement what I said on yesterday evening by anything to-day; but it is evident, to my mind at least, that it has been and is conclusively established that the Government of the United States is paying too much for its powder. Why, I am not going to say; but the proof, to my mind, is conclusive, and, coming from the source which it does—the Naval Proving Board-this fact ought to be accepted by Congress. tablished, I believe, that the Government of the United States can manufacture its powder a great deal more cheaply than for what it is paying for its powder now to private manufac-Something must be wrong. To my mind, the evidence is conclusive that powder can be manufactured in the United States at not to exceed 51.7 cents per pound. If we can manufacture powder at this price-by the Government-it seems to me that private manufacturers likewise should do it, because our experience and observation teach us that the Government of the United States ordinarily does not get things done any cheaper than private manufacturers or private employers of labor, and in most of the government manufactories of different kinds the eight-hour law obtains. In addition to this, in most of the government manufactories of different kinds the employees get a larger number of days of absence each year than do employees working for private manufacturers, and in private establishments men work longer hours than they do while working for the Government and do not have so many holidays as are given to the employees of the Government. When the Government can make powder at a cost of not to exceed 51.7 cents a pound, it strikes me that when we are paying from 65 to 70 cents per pound for our powder there is something radi-As figured out by the reports or estimates made cally wrong. by the Naval Proving Board, when we pay 67 cents a pound for powder that is equivalent to paying a dividend of 40 per cent on the stock owned by the private concerns upon an invest-ment. That is entirely too much profit. If we are paying too much for our powder, we certainly ought to be willing to set some kind of a precedent to bring the Government within reach of buying its powder at something near its cost.

To anyone who has given this question one moment's thought and study, the entire United States is now being held up by a great hydra-headed monster, known in ordinary parlance as a "powder trust." Shall we submit to its dictation, pay its exorbitant prices, and bow to its supreme dictates, or in the interest of our people, operating under the law of self-defense, shall we not seek to curb and control in some way by placing a limitation upon money appropriated in this bill, and say that no part of it shall be used in the purchase of powder made and manufactured by any powder trust? I hope the amendment will obtain.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in favor of the adoption of this amendment. To my mind it is just a proposition as to whether the Government shall deal with a criminal concern as if he were an honest man. Buying this powder from this criminal trust is justified every time on the plea of necessity, and I grant that, if such a necessity could be shown, it would be a justification, because the law of necessity supersedes every other; but in the absence of such a compelling necessity, it is absolutely wrong, from a moral standpoint, to continue the Government in such a criminal copartnership. The course pursued by the Congress of the United States in dealing with this criminal conspiracy is very strange, when we think that we are at the same time spending millions of dollars every year—$4,000,000 was the estimate in this $29,000,000 Standard Oil fine case—trying to suppress these monster criminals.

We are pursuing in the courts of justice this very powder trust, and here we are giving it financial power to fight the Government. It is like arming a robber we are trying to subdue, because the profits of this trust are included in this 67 cents a pound for their powder. There is no necessity that justifies the Congress of the United States in dealing thus with this criminal conspiracy, not even from the standpoint of economy. Why, it is shown since we began appropriating for this Government Powder Factory we have reduced the price of powder from $1 a pound until now we have it down to 67 cents. Why not appropriate enough money to manufacture the Government's own powder, especially in time of peace, and even for war, if necessary? Look at the millions we are spending each year for powder. The evidence shows that for $250,000 we The evidence shows that for $250,000 we can enlarge our factory and double the output. Let us free the Government from the grasp of this giant criminal in the control of the powder supply for the army and navy. Let us do this rather than bow down to this criminal conspiracy, which, like every tyrant, pleads necessity for its defense. [Ap-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to read in the hearings of the committee a couple of paragraphs from an official statement signed by "Joseph Strauss, Lieutenant-Commander, United States Navy, Inspector of Ordnance in Charge." This is an official letter on this powder subject, sent me last session of Congress, and it is in the morning RECORD, page 1196, at the bottom. Here is what he says:

1. I have to submit the following of the probable cost of smokeless powder at private works.

Now, I read paragraph 7:

On the basis of 1,000,000 pounds of powder manufactured per annum, it will be seen that the price of 70 cents per pound yields a profit of $264,000, and this considers every possible charge except the pay of the officers connected with the financial administration of the enterprise.

8. Judging from the cost of the Indianhead plant the total investment will amount to about $650,000. On this basis the stockholders should receive a dividend of over 40 per cent on the capital invested if the powder is sold at 70 cents. If it were sold at 55 cents per pound this would yield 17.5 per cent profit on the capital invested, and in case the orders were cut down during any year to one-half, the profits should still be satisfactory.

Now, that is official, from the man who has charge of this powder question, and is part of a letter which was sent me by Secretary Metcalf last session, and it is in the RECORD now on your desks. Mr. Chairman, just a moment and let us get at the profit. He says here the Indianhead plant total investment was $650,000. Now, that makes a million pounds of powder and he says at the price of 70 cents the profit is $264,000. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars invested and the profit is $264,000 in a year's work!

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Net profit?
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, gentlemen, think of that!
On that basis the stockholders should receive a dividend of 40 per cent, he says. Now, gentlemen the Government, as Secretary Long said in his report here, when the Spanish-American war began (to extricate itself from the combination and control of powder), built a powder plant. Now, that plant makes a million pounds a year. If a "private" concern made no more than that on its $650,000 investment, that would make 40 per cent, or $264,000 a year, making 1,000,000 pounds per year.

Now, to try and check this "powder trust" the Government has gone a step further. It has authorized the creation of this powder board-that was read from by several here yesterday, and from which I have just read-to further control this octopus. To further control it the Government created that board, and yet we have only been able, with all these influences, to get the price reduced to 67 cents per pound, while we are making it at a cost of 43 cents at our government factory. A step further. The Government of the United States, through President Roosevelt, and through its great Department of Justice, Attorney-General Bonaparte, and possibly his predecessor, Mr. Moody, have gone further, Mr. Chairman, and have filed a great injunction bill in the district of Delaware in the federal court making this octopus and its allies all over the United States defendants, and they are now taking testimony in that great case. Here in my hand is a copy of that bill containing many pages, charging every violation of the Sherman antitrust law that it is possible for the English language to charge.

Here is this concern defying the antitrust laws of this country, holding up the Government in time of war, as it did during the Spanish-American war, when it charged us a dollar a pound for powder; and here our powder board in the navy, in effect, concede we are unable to control that octopus; and here is our factory; and, as the gentleman from Indiana, a great Democrat from that great State [applause] says, we, like patriots, ought to stand by the side of our President, by the side of the Department of Justice, stand by the laws we have sworn to uphold, stand by the flag, and "don't give up the ship," and say by your votes to-day that no octopus shall furnish powder to the American Government and deal with us in any such manner as I have just described and as the Government charges in its bill. We can do it—nessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. One minute more. It is our duty, Mr. Chairman; it is our solemn duty to see our antitrust law fully executed, and this amendment helps to do it. [Applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement here. Of course, this particular powder company is the only company that furnishes powder in the United States. We consume a little over 3,000,000 pounds every year, and two-thirds of it we buy and one-third of it we manufacture down here at Indianhead. The price that we have for this periods. here at Indianhead. The price that we pay for this powder is 67 cents, and that price is fixed by the Joint Army and Navy Board, based upon the cost of production of powder by the Government at Indianhead.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this powder purchased by the Government under competitive bids?

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not understand that it is. There is only one concern that furnishes it.

Mr. AMES. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. AMES. I would like to call attention to the fact that the Government can get its alcohol, which is used to make this powder, free, while the manufacturer must pay the duty, and that makes a difference of 6 or 7 cents.

Mr. FOSS. The difference in alcohol is a little over 3 cents a pound. Now, I have furnished a statement made by the Joint Army and Navy Board as to the cost of the manufacture of powder, and it is in the Record. The actual cost at the naval powder factory per pound for the year 1907 for powder was 45 cents. That was simply for labor and material, and gentlemen upon the other side here stand up and assert that we are getting our powder for 45 cents down at Indianhead. They do not take into consideration the other things which enter into the cost of a pound of powder which are enumerated

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. FOSS. Not just now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to correct the statement of the gentleman. He says the figures given include nothing but labor.

Mr. FOSS. Labor and material.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The figures as given in the official reports include depreciation of 10 per cent a year on machinery and 5 per cent a year on plant—a very material difference.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman is right. It includes a depreciation of the plant, one-seventh of the fire loss for the seven years the plant has been in operation, exclusive of alcohol and such administrative expenses as the salaries of officers on duty at the plant and the salaries of higher officials and their clerical force.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that in ten years the machinery will be completely paid for, and this plant has been in operation seven years and cost originally less than $700,000?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSS. I beg to differ with the gentleman on that point. Now, in addition to this 45 cents, the alcohol is figured at nearly 4 cents—3.85 cents. Administrative cost is figured at nearly 3 cents, and then the interest on the capital invested, which is figured here at a million and a half, at 6 per cent, adds 9 cents more, and the actual rejections amount to 2½ cents more, making a total cost of 63.48 cents. Even that 63.48 cents as computed does not include the following items, for which no satisfactory estimates can be obtained:

Freight charges. The companies are required to deliver f. o. b. any point in the United States.
 Experimental work.
 Allowance for extra hazardous risk and pensions to old or disabled enployees.

4. Risk of expensive plants becoming obsolete by changes in composition of powder or in methods of manufacture. (When the change to smokeless powder was made in 1899, a large amount of machinery suitable only for manufacturing brown powder, and which had recently been installed at considerable expense, was rendered useless.)

5. Of the four private plants, one, that at Santa Cruz, Cal., is lying idle, and the other three are working at one-third or less of their full capacity. Since the overhead charges are virtually the same when working at full capacity, the output of a plant working at a reduced capacity is very much more expensive under those conditions. The Du Ponts are keeping the plant at Santa Cruz in condition for manufacturing powder at the request of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] has expired. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] asks for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What private plant is that in California?

Mr. FOSS. One of the Du Pont plants. I will read:

6. No estimate of profit in addition to the 6 per cent on the capital invested has been made.

Now, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance has been before our committee and has stated repeatedly that he considers this a low price. The Du Pont Company have been furnishing powder to our Government at 67 cents, but have done it with a great deal of reluctance. Mr. Chairman, I have not anything further to say. In my judgment, if you adopt this provision, we will not have any powder for the navy for the coming year. We will go on and manufacture down here at Indianhead one-third of the powder we need, but two-thirds of that which we need we will not get.

We have made this appropriation here in this bill upon the estimate submitted by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. We have not cut down his estimate one single dollar. The Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance is not asking for an increased appropriation for the extension of this plant. I think it is a wise thing for us to have in this country a private concern that is manufacturing powder, because when war comes, and it is necessary, the Government will not be able to manufacture all its powder. Inasmuch as we are fixing the price ourselves. and doing it upon a fair and reasonable basis, it seems to me that this committee ought to stand by the recommendation of the Naval Committee in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Mr. FOSS. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman says that if we pass this amendment we will not get two-thirds of the powder we need. This amendment provides that we shall not buy powder manufactured by a trust, and this trust, if it sells the powder, will sell it in violation of law. Then the gentleman must take that as a virtual admission on his part—getting his information, I apprehend, correctly from the powder plant we buy from-that they are a trust and are violating the law.

Mr. FOSS. Of course that point has to be established by the court.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But the gentleman stated as a fact why we should oppose this amendment, that if it passed we would not get two-thirds of the powder we would need.

Mr. FOSS. I think it is a very unwise amendment, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman has not answered my question. The gentleman, then, concedes that the powder people, from whom we are purchasing two-thirds of our powder, and from whom, without this amendment, we would continue to purchase two-thirds of our powder-we will not be able to buy it from these people, because they are a trust and violating the laws of the land.

Mr. FOSS. "The gentleman" concedes nothing.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question, for the purpose of eliciting information?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. You make the statement now that the Government of the United States fixes the price of this powder. That is correct, I understand?

Mr. FOSS. The joint army and navy board fix the price.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, as I understand from informa-tion obtained during the progress of this debate, we are purchasing all our powder from one concern?
Mr. FOSS. The only one that makes it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, I will ask the gentleman whether or not it is a case where the Government fixes a price for the powder—that the Government simply fixes a certain definite figure—and says to the seller, "We will give you so much," and the seller accepts it?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is the way they do. Mr. FOSS. That is all. This board fixes the price, based upon the figures obtained from the manufacturer of the powder, and says to the Du Pont Company, "You must furnish it at

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, as I understand, the Government simply puts this proposition up to the manufacturer, and it is up to the manufacturer either to accept it on the terms and conditions fixed in the contract by the Government or turn it down?

That is it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman answer a question? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In view of the deplorable condition which the gentleman says exists-that if Congress shall fix the price of powder at a reasonable figure above what it costs the manufacturer, the Navy of the United States may be deprived of all supply of the trust-controlled article; that the powder trust will, as he says, refuse to sell at such a price-will he not accept an amendment to this bill providing for an enlargement of the powder plant at a cost of $250,000, when such expenditure will double the capacity of the present plant and enable the Government of the United States to make at 45 cents per pound powder for which it is now paying the powder trust 67 cents a pound? Mr. FOSS. I want to say to the gentleman that I do not admit all these premises.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Which one does the gentleman deny? I would like to ask the gentleman, is there any doubt of the existence of a powder trust? Or what other premise is ques-

Mr. FOSS. That an expenditure of $250,000 would increase the capacity to the extent the gentleman states.

There is in the RECORD to-day a letter Mr. HITCHCOCK. from the Bureau of Ordnance, by authority of the Secretary of the Navy, stating that an appropriation of $250,000 will double the capacity of the Indianhead plant. That appears to be an official statement.

Mr. ROBERTS. That only gives us two-thirds of what we We are still one-third shy, even if they double their capacity down there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If that is the premise that the gentleman from Illinois denies, he evidently stands on uncertain ground. He can not deny that there is in existence a powder trust, which the Government is now prosecuting; a powder trust which has made an international agreement with other powder companies in other countries, under which they have promised not to erect powder factories in the United States. I hold in my hand a synopsis of that agreement. What premise is it, then, that the gentleman denies?

Mr. FOSS. As I heard the gentleman's question it was considerably involved. There were a number of propositions which he made, and I would have to ask the official reporter to repeat it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will simplify the question, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit. Will he accept an amendment to this naval appropriation bill allowing $250,000 for the enlargement of the Indianhead powder plant?

Mr. FOSS. No; I should be opposed to that, in view of the fact that the department has not recommended it, have not submitted it in their estimates, and do not, as I understand, care to enlarge their plant at the present time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the department has stated the fact that by the expenditure of $250,000 we can manufacture a million pounds more of powder a year at a saving of over $250,000 a year. Now, it seems to me that a committee bringing in a bill in these times, when the Treasury is threatened with a constantly increasing deficit, even if the department does not propose such a recommendation, ought itself to propose to enlarge this plant; not only for measures of economy but also for the additional reason, which the gentleman himself has stated, that the Government is practically in the hands of the powder trust as to price.

Mr. FOSS. I do not concede that the Government is in the hands of the powder trust at all. Admiral Mason says it is in the Government's hands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose the powder trust refuses to sell at the price fixed by the board? Where else shall the Gov-mment buy? The tariff prevents buying abroad.

The tariff prevents buying abroad. ernment buy?

Mr. FOSS. Then we will enlarge the plant; but as long as we get powder at a reasonably fair price as fixed by this board. I do not see any necessity for it, and it is a good thing for the Government to keep a private manufacturer making powder, because in time of war it may be necessary for us to call upon some outside concern to do it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will it not be too late to enlarge the plant, after the Government has been for a whole year without two-thirds of the powder it may need? Mr. FOSS. Yes; it would be too late.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It then is in the power of this trust practically to starve the Government at the present time, and the Government has no weapon of defense, and the gentleman declines to give a weapon to the Government by agreeing to an appropriation of only $250,000.

Mr. FOSS. I do not believe it will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. Chairman. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last I want to ask the gentleman a question or two. The gentleman says, If the Du Ponts do not furnish us powder, where are we to get it? Here, gentlemen, is a list of independents named in this injunction bill by the Department of Justice and filed in the Delaware courts, stating that this Du Pont concern is trying to squelch them and grind them

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Into powder.

Mr. BEDE. And not smokeless powder, either. [Laughter.] Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And any one of them would be glad to get a contract to furnish powder. They are at least entitled to a chance—an open chance. They have none, as things showed.

Mr. FOSS. Any one of them can have a contract if they will furnish the navy powder, but they do not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They came here last year and brought such an amount of moral coercion to bear that the President and the Department of Justice proceeded upon their statement and other facts and filed this injunction bill. gentleman knows-he has admitted it ever since he has been in Congress-that the Du Ponts have gotten these contracts. They have gotten them for nearly a century. They have grown so rich that they have belted the world with their monopolistic contracts, and the Department of Justice has just succeeded in dragging the fact out of the mouths of their witnesses. Only a few days ago the Government obtained evidence of one of their agreements, which I put into the RECORD last night for your reading. It is now on your desks. The Government has dragged it out of the mouths of their witnesses that there is an international combination to control every bit of powder that the world makes, except 25 or 30 so-called "independent concerns" in this country which are begging the Department of Justice to bridle this lion. Yet the chairman of this committee stands here defending that trust, when he has time and again voted to enforce the law that has not been enforced against them until this recent suit. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I say, gentlemen, and I say it seriously and dispassionately [laughter]—oh, I am in dead earnest and cool as a cucumber [laughter]—we are particeps criminis by the careless manner in which we have so far proceeded, and I beg you to face about. Can we stand here with a big stick which we could put into the bill, that will not only control them but give these little powder manufacturers a square deal, a fair chance to live without being outraged, coerced, and thrown into bankruptcy, as the bill which was prepared by the Department of Justice says? We owe it to ourselves to uphold the law. We are bound to uphold the President in his effort to break up this trust, for he must see the law "faithfully executed," and at the same time aid him to enforce the Sherman antitrust law, which you are sworn to enforce, and which you will not do unless you pass this amendment.

This is where I stand, and that is my record for twelve years. I was among the first ones to call for a powder factory. I want to read you a word from the speech of the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee [Mr. Foss], on yesterday. He said:

It is manifestly to the interest of the Government to have maintained as large a powder-manufacturing capacity as possible as a reserve in the event of war, in which case we will undoubtedly need all the powder that we can get. The bureau therefore desires not to increase the present output of the factory at Indianhead, although it recommends that its capacity be increased.

"Capacity be increased." Now, that is in the gentleman's own speech yesterday, that the "capacity" of the Indianhead factory "be increased." I have thus quoted from his own speech, which he gave yesterday and which is in the RECORD to-day.

Mr. FOSS. I think the gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will read it to you again. I am reading from page 1193 of the RECORD, at the foot of the page.

Mr. FOSS. I read from the paper which I hold in my hand: The bureau therefore desires not to increase the present output of the factory at Indianhead-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, read on.

Mr. FOSS (continuing)

although it recommends that its capacity be increased.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is what you stated, and you are against it now. [Laughter and applause.] That is in the gentleman's own speech in to-day's Record. The genin the gentleman's own speech in to-day's Record. tleman should stand here for the Department of Justice, and with the President and with the law and order and the Sherman antitrust law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next paragraph. Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I would like to offer on page 13.

The CHAIRMAN. We have passed page 13.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. I trust the Chair will not shut me out. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 10, after the word "and," insert "maintenance and enlargement of."

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSS. I object, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the gentleman will reserve his objection. This amendment is offered, and I intend to follow it with additional amendments further down on the page, so as to enable the department to expend $250,000 in the enlargement of the Government Indianhead powder plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska to the recollection of the Chair; that the paragraph ending with line 6, page 14, was read and no amendment was offered to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman; there was an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from New York will permit the Chair to continue-and thereupon the gentleman from Indiana offered an amendment, which was a separate paragraph, It was not an amendment to the paragraph; he did not offer it as an amendment to the paragraph, but to come in as a separate paragraph at the end of line 6, page 14.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was on my feet and demanding recognition, but the Chair gave preference to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Nebraska had stated to the Chair that he desired to offer an amendment to the paragraph, the gentleman would have been entitled to recog-

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The whole paragraph on page 13 went over until to-day. Inasmuch as I subsided at that time because the Chair had recognized another Member, I ought not to be precluded from presenting the amendment, particularly when the whole paragraph went over until to-day for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks the gentleman from Nebraska can find fault with the Chair if the gentleman himself did not endeavor to preserve his rights.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did make repeated efforts to get the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from Indiana and other gentlemen rose, and the gentleman from Indiana offered an amendment as a separate paragraph at the end of line 6. The gentleman from Nebraska, had he made it known to the Chair, would have been entitled to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I did not suppose it was necessary for me to raise a riot.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not necessary for the gentleman to raise a riot, but it was necessary for the gentleman to state the purpose for which he rose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I endeavored to state it, but the Chair recognized the gentleman from Indiana, and as we passed the paragraph temporarily, I supposed the whole matter went over until to-day.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair will permit, allow me to make this suggestion. While the Chair is accurate in its statement of what occurred on yesterday, it was the plain understanding that all of these matters should be passed over until to-day, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs then having personal knowledge of the fact that there were several gentlemen desiring to offer amendments, and it was not considered that having gone over informally any of us would be shut out by virtue of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] offering instead of an amendment to the paragraph what he chose to call a new paragraph. While, perhaps, strict parliamentary law sustains the Chair, I submit to both the Chair and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], in charge of the bill, that in good faith with the agreement had yesterday we ought to have to-day opportunity to present these various matters.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, not only that, but the amendment itself was an amendment to the pending paragraph. Although the gentleman stated that it was offered as a separate paragraph, in effect it was an amendment to the pending paragraph, because it provides that no part of the appropriation in the paragraph then read should be available in certain ways, and the language of the gentleman that the amendment should be by adding a separate paragraph doés not change the character or effect of the amendment. It was a limitation upon the language in the paragraph that had just been completed.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order had been made that it was not in order as a separate paragraph, the Chair would have passed upon that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I desire to state to the Chair that the gentleman from Indiana stated yesterday, and the RECORD states, that he offered his proposition as an amendment. "I offer the following amendment," and he states to me privately, furthermore, that the proposition which he offered was a proviso to the pending proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] offered an amendment. No one disputes that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not as a separate section.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In view of the misunderstanding and the disposition of the Chair, then, I will ask unanimous consent, Mr.

Chairman, to return.

The Chair will state that, of course, the The CHAIRMAN. Chair has no desire to take advantage of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] or anyone else, and the Chair will take advantage of no one. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] offered an amendment as a separate paragraph. It was so stated. The Chair was not endeavoring to determine whether it was an amendment that belonged to the paragraph that had just been read or not. A request was made to pass the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. The strict construction might have been that that amendment being ruled out of order no other amendment was in order in that place. The Chair would not make such a construction as that, because the Chair thought, that having passed that amendment, it meant the committee meant to pass that subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Do I understand the Chair to rule that it is necessary for me to ask for unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to ascertain the exact facts.

Mr. HARDY. Will the Chair permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the top of the second column on page 1193 of the Record yesterday the Chair will find that the request is made that the various items be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to have his attention called to where the Record speaks of various items.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On page 1193, in the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], the Chair will find

Mr. Sherley. Of course the gentleman realizes that it is impossible for us to follow a detailed statement out of which the gentleman has read only a portion. Now, I suggest, in order to handle this matter and not handleap the department or put a false price upon the powder, to let this letter, which the gentleman states is confidential, go into the RECORD, and allow these items to go over without prejudice until in the morning. in the morning.

I will say that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and myself had amendments to be offered to that paragraph putting a limitation upon the price of powder, and, in view of the record, it seems to me that all of those interested were justified in assuming that this paragraph, as well as the other paragraphs afterwards reached and mentioned, went over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] contend that if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] had been agreed to yesterday as a separate paragraph, it would then be in order to offer an amendment to a preceding paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. While the gentleman from Indiana stated in his amendment that it was a separate paragraph, it was, in effect, a part of the paragraph which had just been read. It was a proviso putting a limitation upon the use to be made of the money appropriated in that particular paragraph, and he can not by designating it is a separate paragraph shut out further amendments to the paragraph then under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that not only the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana on yesterday was offered as a new paragraph, but the amendment adopted by the House to-day offered by the gentleman was offered as a new paragraph in the gentleman's own handwriting. On yesterday there were several items which were passed without prejudice subsequent to the item referred to, and the Chair thinks that the Chair can only rule that the paragraph having been passed, it is not now subject to other amendments. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Nebraska for unanimous consent to return to the paragraph. Is there

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, before that-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Before that, I desire to make a parliamentary

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the request was.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose did the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. HARDY. Before the request for unanimous consent is made, I have just one suggestion to make.

The CHAIRMAN. It has already been agreed to.

Mr. HARDY. Then, I have no further suggestion.
Mr. FOSS. What was the request?
The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Nebraska was to return to the paragraph ending on line 6, page 14, for amendment. The Chair put the request and no objection was made.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the request, or I would have objected to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend until the Clerk can report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 10, after the word "and," insert "maintenance and enlargement of," so it will read "for maintenance of the proving grounds and maintenance and enlargement of powder factory."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, to be followed later by another amendment in the paragraph, will increase the item from $5,278,000 to $5,528,000, and will thus allow the necessary $250,000 for the enlargement of the Indianhead powder plant, in accordance with the estimate of the Bureau of Ordnance sent here under authority of the Secretary of the Navy. That estimate, as it appears in the RECORD to-day, shows that the appropriation of this quarter of a million dollars will double the capacity of the Indianhead plant, which, instead of giving us 1,200,000 pounds of powder a year at a cost of 45 cents a pound——

Mr. FOSS. Where is that stated, may I ask?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is in the Record this morning, included in the remarks of Mr. Gaines of Tennessee. Thus, for the expenditure of $250,000 for the enlargement of this government plant, we will be able to manufacture 2,400,000 pounds of powder a year at 45 cents per pound, in place of 1,200,000 pounds, at a saving of over 20 cents a pound. In other words, we will be able to manufacture double the quantity of powder we now manufacture, and in place of manufacturing one-third of the present needs of the navy we will be able to manufacture two-thirds of the needs. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman in charge of this bill ought to accept this amendment. He himself has stated that only one concern in the United States can manufacture smokeless powder for the United States; he himself has stated that it can and may refuse to accept the figures offered by the government board. case the United States will be unable to procure two-thirds of the supply it needs, and his statement is true.

First, because the Du Pont concern is the trust which monopolizes the whole American manufacture of powder; and secondly, because the tariff on powder prevents the United States from buying at a reasonable price from other countries. I may say, in passing, Mr. Chairman, that it is in the Record now that this Du Pont concern, which is in fact the trust, has in existence an agreement with the powder manufacturers in other parts of the world not to sell their powder in the United States and not to erect powder factories in the United States, the evident purpose being to starve the American market and compel the payment of trust prices for powder. It seems to me, therefore, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that our navy is constantly using an increased quantity of powder, in view of the statement made by the chairman himself that we have only one concern with which we can deal, and which can choke us off at any time, and in view of the further fact that we can manufacture powder 20 cents a pound cheaper than we can buy it, we certainly ought to appropriate the quarter of a million dollars to enlarge the plant, and the money will come back to us in the first year of operation. I hope the chairman will see fit to accept the amendment to his bill. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, what I object to is when the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance came before the committee he stated that he did not desire to have this plant enlarged the coming year. He made an estimate and we allowed it to him. Then afterwards, as I learn, of which I was not aware, a letter has been sent by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines], stating that by the expenditure of $250,000 the capacity of the plant can be doubled, and rather indicating that the department would like to enlarge it. It does not seem to me that the Bureau of Ordnance treated the committee fairly upon this proposition, but so long as the House seems to be favorable to the proposition which has just been passed I shall make no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the amendment which has just been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 21, page 13, strike out all after the word "million" down to the end of line 22, page 13, and insert instead "$528,171."

Mr. FOSS. May I ask the gentleman how much he adds?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is $250,000.

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 4, after the word "proposals," insert: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for powder, other than small-arms powder, at a price in excess of 64 cents a pound."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. I reserve it. Mr. SHERLEY. I did not desire it to be reserved.

Mr. FOSS. What is the purpose of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is purely a limitation on the price which shall be paid for powder.

Mr. FOSS. Will the Clerk please read the amendment again? The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] on the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has not stated his point of order except to make it. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] should suggest—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois to state his point of order.

Mr. Chairman, it is new legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on page 373 of the Digest there is a ruling limiting the price of armor to a certain amount per ton.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. tleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] calls attention to a former ruling of the Chair in reference to the price of armor plate, where an amendment was offered providing-

That no part of this sum shall be expended except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not to exceed $545 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalty.

To that a point of order was made and overruled. Not only the precedent, but the usage, the Chair thinks, will cause the Chair to overrule the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment that limits the power of the Government to purchase powder at a price in excess of 64 cents. The present price paid is 67 cents. I shall not detain the committee by going over again the figures that have been recited here so frequently to-day, and that were published in the RECORD of yesterday, but I want to predicate my proposition upon this fact: It is the common knowledge of every man that the Government never does anything as cheaply as private individuals can do it. Now, by the Government's statement, putting in all of the items of supervision, pay of officers, interest upon a million and a half of investments, they figure the cost at something over 63 cents. And as an illustration that my premise is very true, I desire to state this in regard to alcohol: The Government found it cost them 6 cents per pound of powder for alcohol, but it cost the powder companies only a little over 3 cents. Why? Mr. OLCOTT. No. It is:

Alcohol (seven-tenths of a pound of alcohol per pound of powder), .0385 cents.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I think that the statement shows the additional cost is 3.8 cents a pound for the alcohol.

Mr. OLCOTT. Seven-tenths of a pound is what it is.

Mr. SHERLEY. The statement made here, Mr. Chairman, is that the private manufacturers were expending for alcohol only 3.85 cents per pound of powder. That is my statement, verified by a reference to the RECORD. Now, the Government has spent nearly twice that, because it has no means for recovering any of the ether and the alcohol used in the manufacture of the powder, and that is an illustration of how it always costs the Government more to make anything than it does a private industry.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for just one question? I assume it must cost the private consumer more for his first investment in alcohol than it costs the Government, because the Government gets it free of duty and the private manufacturer has to pay duty, and that adds to the price of

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that; but disregarding the question of duty, the statement is that it costs the Government 6 cents in place of 3.8 cents to the private manufacturer. I simply speak of this as an illustration of the fact that it always costs the Government more to do something than it does an individual.

Mr. OLCOTT.

Mr. OLCOTT. Now, Mr. Chairman— Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to make a connected statement. Now, if the Government can manufacture powder, counting all the items that are necessary, at 63 cents and a fraction over, it is apparent that the private individual can manufacture it at 64 cents and have a fair profit; and it was for that reason I introduced this amendment.

I want to say that the statistics furnished by the Government. both those of the Army and Navy Department, are meager. I wanted a statement to be made by General Crozier that would go into the details. Instead of that, I find his statement is practically a copy of that of the naval officers, in which they stated conclusions without giving detailed figures by which we could verify the cost. But it does appear as a conclusive statement that a fair price would be a fraction over 63 cents. That being true, I fail to see why we should pay 67 cents. Now, a difference of 4 cents is quite an important matter, because the amount we buy is very large. The amount of powder annually procured for the army is approximately 670,000 pounds of cannon powder, of which the price is now 67 cents a pound, and 365,000 pounds of small-arms powder, the present price for which is 841 cents a pound. The Navy Department at present has to procure from three to three and a half million pounds of cannon powder, of which a little over a million pounds are being manufactured by the Naval Powder Factory, leaving about two and one-half million pounds to be purchased. So that a difference of 4 cents in quantities which are so large makes a considerable item of expense to the Government.

I have no desire to embarrass the Government in this mat-I doubt very much whether the Government could get its supply of powder without purchasing from the Du Pont powder people; and while I deplore the existence of that trust as much as any man does, I should like to see the Department of Justice deal with that feature of the case rather than Congress. In this connection the Department of Justice would have very much more to its credit if it had instituted this proceeding just eight or ten years prior to the time that it did institute it. For more than seven years this House has heard annually charges made as to the existence of this combination, and now the proof comes out that an international agreement has been in existence for ten years; and yet the Department of Justice at the expiration of nearly ten years moves the wheels of justice. In very truth they, like the mills of the gods, grind slowly, whether they grind exceeding small or not. But I repeat that that is a matter that we ought not now to deal with here, but on the question of price Congress ought to so legislate as to prevent the Government paying 4 cents more than it needs to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very unwise to fix the price of powder here upon the expert opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky. I think it far better to leave it as it is and leave it to the joint army and navy board to fix the price, because they are experts on the subject. While the gentleman from Kentucky may be an expert on an infinite variety of other subjects, yet I am sure nobody will accuse him of being an expert on the price of powder.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. He fixes it on the expert knowledge supplied by you from government sources.

Mr. FOSS. I am not standing here to defend the Powder trust or anything of the sort. I submit the views of the Navy Department. I desire very much that the navy should get enough powder this year for target practice and for the purposes for which it uses powder; but the chances are, with the other limitation that has already been inserted in the provision passed, the navy will not secure its powder this year, and I trust there will not be any more limitations placed upon the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SHERLEY. Before the gentleman takes his seat, just a suggestion or two. In the first place, the limitation already adopted has in it a loophole which the Navy Department would very quickly take advantage of whenever an emergency arisesand it can determine when the emergency arises-and then the limitation offered by the gentleman from Indiana ceases to be operative.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman what answer he has to give to this question: Is it not a fact, as shown by this board and demonstrated by the tests of the Government's own making of powder, counting all the items which reasonably ought to be counted, that the cost is only a little over 63 cents?

Mr. FOSS. I do not think it is.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, then, if the gentleman does not think, will read-

Mr. FOSS. It does not include all these other items, including freight.

Mr. SHERLEY. What are the items?

Mr. FOSS. I enumerated them, and the larger of the items was freight.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, one thing that impressed me, with reference to these additional expenses, was that the army and the navy people were apparently endeavoring to justify a previous opinion not now warranted by the facts by suggesting various additional equities, the only one of which that has any real value being the freight item. Now, if you will take and subtract that one item of freight from among the others and against it put the one of overvaluation of the real investment.

which does not amount to a million and a half, and will figure out the difference of cost to the Government and the private manufacturer, due to the difference in the hours of labor and wages paid for the work, you will find more than enough to justify a reduction of 4 cents a pound in price.

Mr. FOSS. We have a valuation which has been sent in here by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, which I will put in the RECORD, which the gentleman can see if he desires:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,

Washington, D. C., January 21, 1909.

Memorandum for Mr. Foss concerning the notes on estimates for basing price on smokeless powder which were supplied you yesterday, and which appear on page 1193 of the Congressional Record:

The capital necessary for a plant of similar capacity to that at Indianhead is given as $1,500,000. This amount is made up as follows:

Cost of land with improvements, including railway, steam, air, electric, and water mains, sewer lines, and standplpes; buildings and charges for machinery installation; machinery, including engines, pumps, presses, machine tools, and rolling stock used at the factory.

Stock on hand, including material for manufacture and finished product, based mainly on nitrating cotton, sodium nitrate, acids, alcohol, and powder in process of manufacture.

_ 1, 458, 000 Total____

N. E. MASON, Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will be very glad to see it, though we would like to see it a day ahead instead of a day after we vote on these matters.

Mr. FOSS. I do not think, when you take everything into consideration, that the Government can manufacture powder

Mr. SHERLEY. To quote the gentleman himself, I prefer to accept the opinion of the experts of the department, rather than the expert opinion of the gentleman from Illinois. However much of an expert he may be on various other matters, I submit that he is not an expert on the subject of making powder.

Mr. FOSS. I am speaking generally of the Government, Mr. Chairman. I do not know of anything that the Government enters into the manufacture of that it produces much cheaper, in the long run, than a private concern. You may start in and show a reduction, but as the thing continues, as appropriations after appropriations are made, year after year, when you come to sum them all up you will find, in the end, that it has cost the Government as much to manufacture as it has the private concern.

Mr. SHERLEY. Costing more. Mr. FOSS. And we already have an instance of it in the building of ships for the American Navy. It has been stated here on the floor time and again that the Government could build its ships cheaper than they could be constructed by private concerns. And what has been the result? Why, last year we put in the appropriation bill a provision that one of the col-liers should be built in the Mare Island Navy-Yard, on the Pacific coast, and the estimate that was made for the building of that collier was $1,800,000; and yet bids have been submitted by the Secretary of the Navy showing that he can purchase by private contracts two colliers for that $1,800,000.

[The time of Mr. Foss having expired, by unanimous consent

it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. FOSS. I say to you that upon the general proposition of government manufacture you will find, in the long run, that it costs more for the Government to manufacture than it does to buy of a private concern.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably, it costs more; and when it is shown that the Government can actually manufacture at 63 cents, we have a right to assume that the private manufacturer, by your own argument, can do it for much less. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOSS. But that does not take into consideration a number of things. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Sherley, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 62.

Mr. FOSS. Tellers!

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. Foss and Mr. SHERLEY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 75, noes 69.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next paragraph which was passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $650,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the same amendment after the word "dollars," in line 8, page 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 8, after the word "dollars," insert: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for powder other than small-arms powder at a price in excess of 64 cents a pound."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Foss) there were—ayes 67, noes 48.
Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next paragraph in the bill which was passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ammunition for ships. For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ammunition for issue to ships, $3,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to utilize all ammunition and other supplies already on hand under the appropriations "Increase of the navy; armor and armament," "Reserve ammunition," and "Beserve powder and shell," for general issue to ships in commission, as though purchased from this appropriation: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of shells or projectiles except for shells or projectiles purchased in accordance with the terms and conditions of proposals submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to all of the manufacturers of shells and projectiles and upon bids received in accordance with the terms and requirements of such proposals. All shells and projectiles shall conform to the standards prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SHERLEY Mr. Chairman T. S.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 3, after the word "proposal," insert: "Provided, No part of this appropriation shall be expended for powder other than small-arms powder at a price in excess of 64 cents a pound."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think that covers all of the provisions except the one offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER]. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I would like to say to the Chair that reserved a point of order upon that, which I will withdraw.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will reserve it until we know what the amendment is. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. FOSS. Upon second consideration, Mr. Chairman, I will ask that that go over until to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Foster] will be passed over until to-morrow. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, a private letter which I received a short time ago from a distinguished naval officer contained the significant sentence—" Congress has been so generous in giving us a new navy that we indulge the hope that it will go one step further and give us a new Navy Department."

In that sentence my friend expressed a widespread sentiment, not only among the fighting men of the navy, but a general sentiment among the people of the whole country.

The greatest need which confronts the navy to-day is a better system of naval administration. The system now in force may have been adequate in 1842, when it was created by law, but it is only natural that nearly seventy years of naval expansion and development should make the system outworn and obsolete.

Congress has been generous in providing for the new navy. During the past twenty-six years, which have been required to place this navy in being, there has been appropriated for ships alone the enormous sum of $344,000,000. The country has approved the building of this new navy, and there is a healthy public sentiment in favor of a rational building programme that will maintain the present high standard of efficiency. Congress may not have gone quite as fast as some would like, but we have maintained the United States in its relative position as the second naval power in the world.

This building policy has brought into being a fleet of fighting ships which has won the admiration of the world by its cruise around the globe. That voyage justified in full measure the pride which the American people feel in their navy, as well as demonstrated that the character and efficiency of the officers and enlisted men is equal, if not superior, to any other service

But what is the purpose of this navy? This magnificent navy was not created as a plaything, or to satisfy our vanity for military display. The people of the United States appre-ciate that our national defense depends in a large measure upon the navy, and if that defense in times of stress is to be effective that navy must be efficient.

While Congress has been liberal in making appropriations not only for new ships, but in improving the conditions of the officers of the navy, and in uplifting the conditions of the enlisted men to a point where it is now attracting recruits from a high class of young American manhood, it has omitted to provide a system of administration to conform to these new conditions.

The question of naval administration is vital to the highest efficiency of the navy. Of what use is it to spend millions in providing a modern weapon for our national safety and defense, if at the same time we do not also provide a system by which the weapon can be effectively used in time of need?

The present system of naval administration was created by law in 1842, when the war vessels of the world consisted of sailing ships. Since that time the sailing ship has given way to the steam frigate with its smooth-bore guns, and it in turn to the armor-clad, with its high-power rapid-fire guns.

Successive revolutions have occurred in those seventy years, not only in the ships themselves but in their armament, and to-day the modern battle ship is a floating fortress filled with intricate electrical and mechanical apparatus.

Equally as great changes have occurred in the conditions under which sea battles are fought. With all the vast changes in naval architecture and naval warfare, the United States to-day finds itself still trying to administer its navy under a system created nearly seventy years ago, the defects of which must be apparent to all.

A sound system of naval administration naturally embraces two general divisions—the personnel, comprising the officers and men; and the matériel, comprising the ships and their equipment. That is the natural division of the military and the civil. The military phase of the navy is fundamental and paramount. From the military standpoint, that administration should not only provide the nation with an effective fighting force, but should have the machinery to successfully use that force in time of need. It must look to keeping the navy in readiness as a weapon, and in devising plans of campaign in advance of hostilities. In short, it should be able to solve all the problems of war, and to suggest the means necessary to accomplish success. That is really the object for which the navy is created.

It seems almost past belief, and yet it is true, that there is no man or body of men provided by law, below the Secretary of the Navy himself, whose duty it is to decide the purely military questions of the naval service.

Under our system of government the Secretary of the Navy very properly is a civilian, and upon him rests the responsibility of the proper administration of the navy in time of peace, and its successful and effective employment in time of war.

It is not fair to impose this tremendous responsibility upon a civilian secretary, without providing him by law with the means of obtaining competent advice in solving the purely military problems for which he is responsible, and any system which fails to make such provision is faulty and incomplete.

Secretaries in the past have convened special boards without number in attempts to settle vexatious questions of this character which arise from time to time. Without going into the question of conditions which have arisen in these boards, it is clear that this method is unsatisfactory, and Congress and the public are left largely in the dark as to where responsibility in disputed matters rightfully belongs. If the Secretary were provided by law with that expert military advice so necessary for the successful conduct of the department, responsibility for defects and blunders could be definitely fixed.

BUREAU SYSTEM.

Another inherent defect in the present system of naval administration is the bureau system as it stands under existing law. President Roosevelt in his last annual message stated it tersely when he said that "there is literally no excuse whatever for continuing the present bureau organization of the navy."

This organization consists of eight separate and distinct bureaus, each independent and supreme in itself. It is proper that there should be a natural division of the work of this great department, but I can see no defense of a law which provides that—

The orders of the chief of bureau shall be construed as emanating from the Secretary of the Navy, and shall have full force and effect as such.

The clause practically sets up eight independent secretaries of the navy, each supreme in his division of naval duties. The tendency of the system is to place the interest of the bureau above the interest of the navy as a whole. Furthermore, this independence has deprived the Government of the benefit of the inventive genius of the country not found within the bureaus themselves.

I do not criticise these chiefs of bureaus as men and officers. Human nature would have to be amended if we expected them to do anything else but strive to magnify the importance of the duties of their respective bureaus.

It needs no explanation to point out that under this system the work of the bureaus is not and can not be properly coordinated. There is but one way under the law whereby they may be coordinated, and that by the Secretary himself. This would be a physical impossibility with the many questions arising, but we devolve this duty upon him without providing any advisers by law to assist him in his impossible task.

The baneful defects of the existing system have shown themselves in many directions. In the question of the design of ships, we have recently witnessed the entire navy engaged in a fierce discussion of the armor-belt line. Without attempting to say which side was correct in its contentions, it must be apparent that the efficiency of the navy, its discipline, and its fighting spirit is in no way promoted by these unseemly internal strifes.

The general public regarded this as a controversy between the bureau advocates on one side defending their actions, and on the other side the line officers of the navy—the men who must be the ones to use these weapons in the national defense.

We see it in the movement of ships. A recent issue of the Literary Digest relates that not long ago the captain of a battle ship received orders from one bureau to sail from a navy-yard at once, while at the same time he was threatened with courtmartial by another bureau if he did so.

In the equipment of ships we find many examples of conflicts of authority; unnatural and unbusinesslike division of duties and functions, with the consequent delays and extravagances which inevitably follow.

Can anyone defend a system where the installation of the fire-control apparatus on a war ship is divided up among three separate and distinct bureaus?

Is it businesslike to have the engines and pumps of a ship under the jurisdiction of one bureau, while the steam pipes leading to them, and necessarily an integral part of them, are under the control of another bureau?

Many instances could be cited to show that the lines of authority between different bureaus within a single battle ship are mixed in bewildering confusion and cross and recross each other at many points.

We have seen the wastefulness of the system best exemplified in the repair of ships as conducted at navy-yards. With each bureau not only independent by law, but separately provided by Congress with its own appropriation, there grew up at each navy-yard not a single well-developed plant, but in reality each bureau was building up at the several yards its own independent plant, with separate buildings, machinery, and workmen.

At these navy-yards were three or four carpenter shops, as many pattern shops, paint shops, blacksmith shops, and so forth. No business man would tolerate such a condition for a moment, as its wastefulness and extravagance is plain.

To the credit of Secretary Newberry be it said that he has taken steps to modernize the business side of the repair of ships at navy-yards through the consolidation of similar shops. That this has worked well is shown by the last report of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, which says:

During the past year all pattern, copper, and foundry work at the larger eastern yards has been consolidated under this bureau, and the system has now been in operation long enough to show that it will result in increased efficiency and in economy of operation to the Government, and that after the various shops have been thoroughly arranged to meet the new conditions there will be still further improvement in this direction.

I understand that the Secretary has further plans for consolidation and the elimination of the bureau system at navy-yards, which are to be put in force in the near future.

These examples only emphasize the anomalous condition of naval administration. With eight separate bureaus of equal authority, all independent of one another, the essential element of corelation and coordination is dependent entirely upon the pleasure of the bureau chief.

These eight bureaus have to do with the construction and the maintenance of the entire navy. The responsibility is divided, scattered, and many times entirely lost in the intricacies of the present system.

From the standpoint of economy there is great need of reform in the manner of making the naval estimates to Congress. There can not be proper supervision and scrutiny of appropriations by Congress so long as they are made as at present under this system of eight independent bureaus. The naval bill for the coming fiscal year contains separate appropriations for five different bureaus for public works, and separate appropriations for three different bureaus for machinery and tools. Economy demands that expenditures for public works, machinery, and tools, and other similar items of purely industrial character should be centered in one control.

The need of reform in this important branch of the public service is not of recent origin. It was pointed out as far back as the days of Secretary Whitney in 1885, and from that time down to the present it has been repeatedly recommended by successive Secretaries of the Navy.

SECRETARY WHITNEY'S VIEWS.

Secretary William C. Whitney was at the head of the Navy Department long enough to learn the inherent defects of the system, and in his annual report for 1885 he says:

It must be evident that there is something radically wrong with the department. The universal dissatisfaction is the conclusive proof of this. It is expressed to me by influential members of both political parties, and quite universally by naval officers. It forces itself daily upon me for consideration.

He pointed out the difficulties encountered under the present form of administration, and said:

The natural division of the work of the department is into three

The natural division of the work of the department is into three branches:
First. The department having to do with the personnel and the fleet. This covers the enrollment, service, detail, uniform, organization, and discipline of the personnel: of the movements and command of fleets and vessels when commissioned; and this is properly the military branch of the department.

Second. The Department of Material and Construction. This covers the construction, repair, and care of vessels before commissioned; their armament and equipment, including military stores (but not provisions and clothing), as well as the management and maintenance of dockyards, their buildings, machinery, and their civil establishment.

Third. The Department of Finance and Accounts; this covering contracts and purchases of all naval stores, flags, coal, stationery, and care of storehouses, etc.

of storehouses, etc.

He saw with great clearness the disadvantages which come to us by not availing ourselves of the inventive genius of the country in naval construction and architecture:

try in naval construction and architecture:

All the great naval powers appear to have found it to be to their advantage to avail themselves largely of private enterprise in the creation of implements of war. No designing engineer of the English Admiralty has designed an engine for many years. In their stead the private marine-engine builders of the nation, who can produce evidence of adequate responsibility, are invited to compete with each other to produce, for example, an engine that shall be able to accomplish certain defined results, such as a certain amount of power with the greatest amount of power with the greatest amount of power with the greatest economy of weight and space consistent with strength and durability.

With us, on the contrary, the head of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, upon whom we depend for designs, is selected from a corps which is at present given by the Government only an elementary training in the science of engineering. He is at once loaded down with the distracting executive work of construction. Having the charge of a multitude of shops in the various yards, he must look after a great variety of contracts, purchases, and so on. In addition to all this, for which of itself few men are equal, he is expected to design the most complicated machinery and give his country the benefit of the daily improvements in his art. It is needless to say that to such a task no man is equal.

The policy of enlisting private enterprise in the work tends to the creation and development of important branches of industry within the country. The resources of our country, its ingenuity and enterprise in any line of human endeavor, when called out, are unexcelled by any nation or people on earth.

Our Government has placed itself in no relation to the inventive genius of the country, and is without the rich fruits which such a course would bring to it.

On the question of the broad general policy of the department,

On the question of the broad general policy of the department, Secretary Whitney said:

Another distinction to which attention may properly be called between our system and that in general use elsewhere is as to the manner in which the general policy of the department is shaped and directed. At the top of the system there should be wise general direction. It is of first importance that the system should center in a wise and judicious and capable directing power, for there is necessarily the daily decision to be made of what shall be done in any particular line.

The naval powers of the Old World provide a permanent council or board, whose duty it is to consult with and advise the minister of marine. They are largely freed of executive duties and functions, so that they may have time for investigation and study, and to be thus enabled to take a large view generally of the questions which are involved in directing the course and general policy of the department.

When the bureau system was devised it was supposed that the bureau chiefs would be able to sit in consultation with the Secretary, and that the department would not lack intelligent guidance. But the inevitable result of throwing large executive duties upon any man is to disqualify him for council. At the present time this function is not performed at all.

My experience of the manner in which important decisions are neces.

My experience of the manner in which important decisions are necessarily made by the Secretary, without opportunity for proper deliberation and intelligent advice, leads me to say without hesitation that the follies of the department are largely attributable to this.

As in the English service, and notably in the French and German, the Secretary should be provided with a board or boards for consultation, consisting of naval officers and experts, most of them comparatively free from executive duties, whose duty it should be to assist him in solving the technical problems of the department.

He same up his recommendations in the following language.

He sums up his recommendations in the following language:

The system of organization indicated herein begins with the Secretary (who occupies a position at the confluence of all the powers confided to the department) and supports him with some aids or advisers in such number and of such character as shall seem judicious. Then places one person at the head of each of the three natural divisions of the functions of the department, which may be stated to be finance, construction, and personnel; then subdivides the business of each division according to the subject-matter with which each deals. Thus the division of material and construction would necessarily have a subdivision or bureau for engineering, one for construction, one for equipment, and one for ordnance.

At present the four heads of these bureaus, instead of cooperating, work independently of each other and not always in harmony in producing their respective parts of a completed ship.

If such an organization should commend itself to the lawmaking power and be once tried, I feel confident it would be of great benefit to the country.

It calls for no additional expenditures.

SECRETARY LONG'S RECOMMENDATIONS.

Hon. John D. Long, who for five years was Secretary of the Navy, made the following recommendation for the consolidation of bureaus in his annual report for 1899:

Navy, made the following recommendation for the consolidation of bureaus in his annual report for 1899:

In the opinion of the department it would be in the interest of good business organization and economy to consolidate the three bureaus of Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Equipment under one head—the Bureau of Ships. These bureaus have to do with the construction and fitting out of vessels; in one word, the material of the ship. It is an integral work. When a contract is made for the construction of a ship, it is made with one builder. It is not given part to a constructor of hulls, part to a steam-engine manufacturer, and part to an outfitting firm. Whatever various trades enter into the work are all under one head. This is the method of private shipyards which build the largest ships and which are not left to the administration of three heads between whom delicate questions of respective authority and responsibility are liable to arise, resulting in delays and too often in friction and lack of harmony of cooperation.

Each of the above bureaus has now, during the construction of naval vessels, its separate inspectors at each yard. A consolidated bureau could, of course, be run much cheaper than three bureaus, and a great saving made by a reduction of the now three separate working forces, both clerical and mechanical, especially in our navy-yards. Fewer naval officers would be needed, as there would be but one staff instead of three, so that more officers would be available for other duty. Under the present system one bureau brings its work to the point of readiness for the work of another, which is not always ready for it. There is necessarily a lack of that adaptation and harmony of movement which one head would secure.

If this consolidation were effected, the matter of furnishing coal and other current supplies, which is now under the direction of the Bureau of Equipment, could be easily transferred to the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and such other incidental changes made as became

It is most interesting, in the consideration of the workings of the present system, to note what he has to say in his annual report for the year 1900 when he renewed that recommendation. Here is what he said:

Here is what he said:

The recommendation heretofore made that the organization of the Navy Department be simplified by the consolidation of the three bureaus of Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Equipment is renewed. Under the present system, from the inception of its design until completed and placed in commission, the plans and specifications of a naval vessel are in the hands of three bureaus, each with a distinct organization, each having exclusive jurisdiction within certain lines, and all charged with the duty of carrying on work within, but not beyond, their respective provinces, as nearly as may be at the same time.

Such a system is, in practical administration, cumbrous and expensive, and from its very nature tends to develop controversies respecting the scope of each bureau's duties and to occasion friction, delay, and want of harmony in doing whatever approaches border lines of jurisdiction. It is to the credit of the officers in charge of the bureaus concerned that work upon ships now under construction has been carried on without more friction; but the system itself is none the less objectionable, and is a source of inconvenience, delay, largely increased cost, and occasional confusion.

The present divided organization is the outgrowth of conditions which no longer exist. The hull, the propelling machinery, and the articles of equipment of a modern steamship no longer constitute simple, distinct, and separable elements in construction, but, on the contrary, in their multiplicity of details are so interwoven as to render embarrassing their supervision by three sets of independent administrative officials.

The union of these three bureaus, the chief function of which is to deal with the material of the ship, into one bureau, which might appropriately be called the "Bureau of Ships;" the consolidation of their several corps of assistants and inspectors, and the conduct of the really integral work of building and equipping vessels, under the management of one responsible chief instead of three chiefs, would promote the efficient and economical administration of this important part of the business of the Navy Department.

nomical administration of this important part of the business of the Navy Department.

A chief of bureau is practically an assistant secretary. The proposed consolidation would not only reduce three of these assistants to one, but in like manner reduce the supervising, mechanical, and clerical forces in every navy-yard, and thus save great and unnecessary expense. At present each of these bureaus in question has at each yard its separate shops, inspectors, foremen, and workmen, all often doing the same kind of work. No private business is run on such a wasteful and inharmonious plan. I renew the recommendation in this respect of my last annual report.

SECRETARY MOODY'S VIEWS.

Hon. William H. Moody, while Secretary of the Navy, made a careful study of this subject, and his views are contained in his annual report for 1903, from which the following extracts are made:

As the naval establishment grows in importance and the amount of public money devoted to its maintenance is increased, its proper administration justly becomes an object of solicitude. It is asserted by many, both within and without the naval service, that alterations in the organic law governing the administration of naval affairs would result in an increased efficiency and economy. It has been pointed out with truth that in the civil war, and, in a very much less degree, in the war with Spain, the organization proved inadequate.

The business of the department is distributed among eight bureaus, at the head of each of which is a naval officer appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of four years. The distribution of business among the several bureaus is within the discretion of the Secretary, but this discretion ought not to be exercised in such a manner as to abolish in effect any bureau, nor can he terminate the tenure of office of the bureau chiefs.

The distribution of business among bureaus independent of and unrelated to each other, except through the action of the Secretary, unquestionably creates a condition out of which grow conflicts of jurisdiction between the bureaus rather than the interests of the navy. The division of business in the bureaus exists not only in the department, but extends to the navy-yards, and even to some extent to the ships in commission. This leads sometimes to excessive and cumbersome organization and lack of harmony of effort, resulting from the fact that there is no coordination of work, except by the voluntary action of bureau chiefs, short of the Secretary's office itself.

It is vitally important that there should be available to the civilian head of the department the most accurate military information and the best military advice. Without both he would be sure to commit grave errors, which might lead to disastrous results. It clearly follows that there should be some military man or men charged with the duty of collecting and collating information and the giving of responsible advice on military affairs. The organization which lacks this feature is defective in a vital part. The statutory organization of the department includes no agency which is charged with this most important function.

Second. The consolidation of the bureaus in the department.

Third. The creation of a general staff, which shall be responsible for the efficiency of the vessels affoat and the personnel of the navy, collect and digest military information upon which plans for active operations may be formulated, and act as the military adviser of the Secretary.

I venture to express the hope that Congress may give to the whole subject of the organization of our naval establishment its best thought and attention. The cost of our naval establishment, as well as the importance of the efficiency of our navy, would amply warrant all the study which can be given.

And so it goes. Those responsible for the efficiency of the and so it goes. Those responsible for the emickey of the service as a whole have shown clearly the necessity for modification of the existing system; and yet the system itself, with its shortcomings and defects revealed, has been able to perpetuate itself.

This magnificent navy of ours is entitled to a modern system of administration. To bring about that wise general direction at the top, the Secretary should be provided with such aids or advisers as may be wise and judicious; and in making such provision, executive and administrative duties should be divorced from the duties of counsel and advice.

The proper coordination and corelation of the bureaus should be secured by making them subordinate to the Secretary, and not independent and equal. This can be accomplished by re--pealing that clause of existing law—the source of many of the defects of the present system-which provides that

The orders of a chief of bureau shall be considered as emanating from the Secretary of the Navy, and shall have full force and effect as such.

Then divide the navy into two grand divisions-personnel and materiel, military and civil—and consolidate those bureaus which have to do with the integral work of constructing and equipping the ships.

Such an organization, if properly worked out in detail, will put an end to the constantly recurring controversies, which are the best evidence that the present system is faulty and defective. It will put the purely industrial side of the navy on a business basis, and thus result in a saving of millions of dollars to the people. But, above all, it will provide proper consideration for the broad problems of the navy as a whole, and make certain the highest possible standard of efficiency in every branch of the service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to insert in the Record the bill which I alluded to to-day in making my speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to insert in the Record the matter referred to by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

That in order to further restrain, suppress, and eliminate competition in the trade and commerce in gunpowder and other high explosives among the various States, and in order to monopolize and control such trade and commerce, the said "Gunpowder Trade Association of the United States," and the aforesaid members thereof, in the year 1877 inaugurated and carried on a fierce and destructive competition against The Lake Superior Powder Company, which said last-named company was at that time an independent company and engaged in the manufacture of gunpowder and other high explosives in the State of Michigan, and the shipment and sale of the same in the said State and among various of the States of the Union in competition with the various members of said Gunpowder Trade Association; that said ruinous and destructive competition was inaugurated and carried on as aforesaid for the sole purpose of eliminating and destroying the competition of gunpowder and Super or light well of the same in the said State and for the purpose of monopolizing said trade and commerce and placing the same under the absolute control of the said Gunpowder Trade Association and the several members thereof; that as a result of said ruinous and destructive competition the said Lake Superior Powder Company, on or about the Sth day of February, 1878, was compelled and forced to and did enter into a certain agreement with the said Gunpowder Trade Association and the members thereof whereby it was agreed, among other things, that the said Lake Superior Powder Company, on or about the States of the United States except those States included in the so-called "Lake Superior Powder Company and the members of refectively controlling and suppressing said trade and commerce, and in order to destroy and eliminate all further compet

That on the 1st day of June, 1881, the said Gunpowder Trade Association and the several members thereof hereinbefore specifically named, renewed the original agreement of 1872, hereinbefore described, for a further period of five years, for the purpose of continuing the restraint and monopolization in the shipment and in the sale of gunpowder and other high explosives among the several States and Territories of the United States; and your petitioner further alleges that said association did thereafter, from the year 1881 to the year 1886, exercise control over the business and operations of its several members in the shipment and sale of gunpowder and other high explosives among the several States and Territories of the United States, in substantially the same manner and with the same purposes and designs, and with the same effect upon the trade and commerce, in the shipment and sale of high explosives among the various States as it had done during the period of nine years prior to the 1st day of June, 1881, and that the vote and voice of each of said members in said association during the second period was precisely the same as under the original agreement of 1872.

That during the period from 1881 to 1886 the business of the said California Powder Works and the said Lake Superior Powder Company, and each of them in the shipment and sale of high explosives among the various States was controlled by said association in substantially the same manner as hereinbefore alleged, and that all competition between each of said companies and the members of said association was during said time suppressed and eliminated to the extent hereinbefore alleged, and that the business of the said Sycamore Manufacturing Company in the manufacture of blasting powder in Tennessee and the shipment and sale of the same among the various States was operated by the said E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. in complete harmony with the rules and regulations of said association as hereinbefore set forth and without competition.

the rules and regulations of said association as hereinbefore set forth and without competition.

That by reason of the acts, transactions, and doings hereinbefore alleged of the members of said association and of the acts, transactions, and doings hereinbefore alleged of the said Gunpowder Trade Association, the said association and its members did control during the period from 1881 to 1886 eighty-five (85) per cent of the trade and commerce in the shipment and sale of gunpowder and other high explosives among the various States and Territories of the United States, and did during said time constitute a combination in restraint of trade and commerce among the various States; that during said period there were but two independent manufacturing concerns engaged in producing gunpowder and other high explosives, and shipping and selling the same among the States in competition with the members of said Gunpowder Trade Association, which said manufacturing concerns were as follows: King's Great Western Powder Company (of Ohio), and the D. C. Rand Powder Company (of Pittsford, N. Y.); that said first-named company, or its successor, The King Powder Company, subsequently became a party to the combination and conspiracy in the manner hereinafter alleged.

That on the Sth day of August, 1878, there was organized under the law of the State of Ohio the King's Great Western Powder Company, which said corporation at about the same time built a powder mill near the city of Cincinnati, and for eight years thereafter manufactured thereat gunpowder and other high explosives and shipped and sold the same in the said State of Ohio and among the several States of the Union in active competition with the several members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association.

That on the 18th day of May, 1881, there was organized under the laws of the State of New York the Marcellus Powder Company, which said corporation at about the same time built a powder mill at Marcellus, in said State, and for five years thereafter manufactured thereat blasting powder and other high explosives and shipped and sold the same in the State of New York and among various States of the Union in active competition with the several members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association.

That on the 15th day of December, 1881, there was organized under the laws of the State of Ohio a corporation known as The Ohio Powder Company, which at about the same time constructed a powder mill near the city of Youngstown, Ohio, and for five years thereafter manufactured thereat blasting powder and other high explosives and shipped and sold the same in the said State of Ohio and among various States of the United States in active competition with the several members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association.

That during the next few years the active competition of the said King's Great Western Powder Company, the said Marcellus Powder Company, and the said Ohio Powder Company, described as aforesaid, proved a disturbing element and operated to seriously affect the combination in restraint of trade and the monopolization in the shipment and sale of gunpowder and other high explosives which the several members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association of a ruinous and destructive competition against the said King's Great Western Pow ing said companies out of business and suppressing the competition which said companies and each of them had created and were then carrying on in opposition to the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association.

That as a result of said destructive and ruinous competition inaugurated and carried on by the members of said association against King's Great Western Powder Company, the Marcellus Powder Company, and The Ohio Powder Company, as aforesaid, the price of blasting powder as sold in the territory which was operated in by the said three independent powder companies was reduced by the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association from the price of two dollars and forty ($2.40) cents per keg delivered at the mines in carload lots, while in noncompetitive territories the price of blasting powder was maintained by the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association at two dollars and forty ($2.40) cents per keg when delivered at the mines in carload lots; that such reduction in the price of powder in competitive territory made by the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association, as aforesaid, was for the sole purpose and with the one object of driving out and eliminating the said three independent competitive powder companies from the trade and commerce in the shipment and sale of blasting powder among the various States; and complainant alleges and states the fact to be that the price of eighty cents (80) per keg for blasting powder, between the years of 1883 and 1886, was less than the cost of the manufacture of said powder to the members of said Gunpowder Trade Association, and was a price below that at which said independent powder companies, or any other powder company, could profitably manufacture and ship and sell blasting powder to the said trade, and that the action of the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association who were actively engaged in conducting such ruinous and competitive warfare resulted in great financial loss not only to said independent powder companies but to the members of tained the price of gunpowder at New York and all eastern, southern, and western points where no competition existed at five dollars ($5) per keg; and your complainant alleges that the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association during said time, to wit, from 1883 to 1886, reduced the price of gunpowder, as hereinbefore alleged, in the competitive markets in the State of Ohlo and in adjacent States in which the King's Great Western Powder Company was competitor, for the purpose of destroying and eliminating the competition of said company and for the purpose of preventing said company from selling its powder except at great financial loss, and that said reduction in the price of powder, as aforesaid, was made by the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association in furtherance of the combination and conspiracy which then existed and which ever since said time has existed between the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association of the United States to monopolize and restrain the trade and commerce in the sale of gunpowder and other high explosives among the several States of the United States.

That as a result of such fierce and ruinous competitive warfare which then existed and which ever since said time has existed between the members of the said Gunpowder Trade Association of the United States to monopolize and restrain the trade and commerce in the said for the content of the said o

OPERATIONS OF THE COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY DURING THIRD PERIOD, 1891.

That on the 1st day of July, 1886, the various members of the said "Gunpowder Trade Association of the United States," to wit, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., The Hazard Powder Company, the Lafin & Rand Powder Company, the Oriental Powder Mills, The American Powder Mills (successor to American Powder Company), the Miami Powder Company, the Austin Powder Company of Cleveland, The Sycamore Manufacturing Company, The Lake Superior Powder Company, the California Powder Works, the Schaghticoke Powder Company, the King's Great Western Powder Company, the Marcellus Powder Company, and The Ohio Powder Company were members of the combination and conspiracy herein described, and were confederated together in an attempt to monopolize the trade and commerce in the shipment and sale of gunpowder and other high explosives among the Several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore alleged.

That in order to more effectually eliminate competition in and in order to more completely restrain and monopolize, the trade and commerce in the shipment and sale of gunpowder and other high explosives among the various States and Territories of the United States, and in furtherance of the same combination and conspiracy which had theretofore existed, the several corporations and copartnerships above named in this subdivision did, on or about the 1st day of July, 1886, enter into an agreement in the form of a pool, which was commonly known and described as the "Fundamental agreement." that said "Fundamental agreement" made and entered into as aforesaid contained numerous provisions, among which were the following:

That each member thereof was thereafter permitted to ship and sell in the State of its domicile and among the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia without penalty paid to the said association only a certain per centum of the total amount of gunpowder and other high explosives shipped and sold by all of the parties to said "Fundamental agreement" in the States of their domicile and among the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, which per centum was the same per centum which each member's shipments and sales during the two years next preceding the 1st day of July, 1886, was of the total amount of the shipments and sales during the two years next preceding the 1st day of July, 1886, was of the total amount of the shipments and sales during the same per cotal of time of all of the parties to said "Fundamental agreement:" that it was further provided by said "Fundamental agreement" by any or all of the members which were parties to said agreement which sold more gunpowder and other high explosives than their allotted share, and that compensation would be paid by said treasurer to any or all of the members which were parties to said agreement which sold less gunpowder and other high explosives than their allotted share, and that compensation were to be imposed and paid as follows: In the amount of one and four-tenths (14) cents per pound or thirty-five (35) cents per keg for all blasting powder oversold or undersold

That in the month of July, 1891, in order to continue the conspiracy and combination in restraint of trade and commerce hereinbefore described and for the purpose of more completely and effectually monopolizing such trade and commerce, he several corporations and coparinerships parties to said "Fundamental agreement," as aforesaid, entered into another agreement known as the "Presidents' agreement," which was in substance the same as the said "Fundamental agreement" so far as its object and purpose was concerned, but differed with respect to the manner in which such object and purpose was to be effected; that one of the provisions of the said "Presidents' agreement" entered into as aforesaid, required the several copartnerships and corporations parties thereto, to select each for itself a representative which representatives when so chosen and selected constituted a "Board of Trade" so-called; that such "Board of Trade" was vested by the terms of said "Presidents' agreement" with full power to control the operations and business of the several parties to said agreement and to fix the prices at which gunpowder and other high explosives should thereafter from time to time be sold among the various States and Territories of the United States; and your petitioner alleges that thereafter during the said fourth period, the several copartnerships and corporations selected representatives on such "Board of Trade," and that said board from time to time, from the year 1891 to the year 1896, fixed the prices at which gunpowder and other high explosives should be shipped and sold among the various States by the several corporations and copartnerships parties to said "Presidents' agreement;" the said "Board of Trade" also from time to time during said period imposed fines and penalities upon the several corporations and copartnerships whenever they shipped and sold gunpowder or other high explosives at prices different from those prices which had been established by said "Board of Trade."

I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., a copartnership of Delaware, and its successors were enabled to dominate and control and ever since said time have dominated and to the said Equitable Powder Manufacturing Company ever since said time have dominated and conspiracy.

That the said Equitable Powder Manufacturing Company ever since said time has been and now is a party to said combination and conspiracy.

VII. THE CONTROL OF THE DYNAMITE TRADE.

THE CONTROL OF THE DYNAMITE TRADE.

Your petitioner further alleges that at various times, to wit, from 1872 until June 30, 1895, during the existence of the combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade among the various States hereinbefore described, there were organized under the laws of various of the several States of the Union various corporations having for their object the manufacture and shipment and sale of a high explosive commonly known as dynamite, which said explosive is commonly used for the same purposes as those for which blasting powder is used; that the sale of dynamite, therefore, came into active competition with the sale of blasting powder, and it became necessary in order to effectually monopolize the shipment and sale of such high explosives that the members of the combination and conspiracy herein described should control the trade and commerce in dynamite among the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia; that in order to carry their purpose and intention of monopolizing such trade and commerce in such high explosives into effect the said E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., the said Hazard Powder Company, and the said Laflin & Rand Powder Company, and their officers and agents, organized, on or about the 30th day of June, 1895, under the laws of the State of New Jersey, a corporation known as the Eastern Dynamite Company, for the express purpose of acquiring the ownership and control of all those copartnerships, firms, and corporations which were at that time engaged in the business of manufacturing dynamite at their respective manufactories and shipping and selling the same among the various States; and your petitioner alleges that thereafter the said Eastern Dynamite Company did, at various times between the 30th day of June, 1895, and the time of the filing of this petition, acquire, by purchase, exchange of capital stocks, and by various other manipulations and transactions to your petitioner unknown, the ownership or control of the properties or capital stocks of the following-named companies, each and all of which were at the time when so acquired by the said Eastern Dynamite Company engaged in the manufacture of dynamite at their respective manufactories and in the shipment and sale of the same throughout the various States of the United States in competition with each other and in competition with the members of said "Presidents' agreement" in their manufacture and shipment and sale of blasting powder; dynamite among the various States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, and that the said Eastern Dynamite Company ever since its organization has been and now is a member of the combination and conspiracy hereinbefore described, having for its object the suppression of all competition in the shipment and sale of high explosives throughout the United States and the monopolization of such commerce.

That the said Eastern Dynamite Company, after having acquired the control of said companies, as aforesaid, did from time to time during the two years next preceding the time of the filing of this petition dissolve the corporate existence of practically each and every one of said corporations and take over to itself the physical properties of such corporations when so dissolved, and thereupon continued to and now does operate the various plants and properties taken over as aforesaid as the plants and properties of the said Eastern Dynamite Company, all of which was done for the purpose of more effectually and completely monopolizing the trade and commerce in the shipment and sale of dynamite among the various States.

(or its successors), the said Hazard Powder Company, and the said Laffin and Rand Powder Company, being then and there the largest manufacturers, shippers, and sellers of gunpowder and other high explosives in the United States and parties to said combination and conspiracy, as aforesaid, together acquired a majority of the total issue of twenty thousand (20,000) shares of the capital stock of said Eastern Dynamite Company, and at the time of the filing of this petition the following-named companies are the owners of capital stock of said Eastern Dynamite Company, as follows:

Your petitioner further alleges that for the purpose of continuing said combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade in the shipment and sale of gunpowder and other high explosives among the various States, and in order to more completely monopolize the same, the various members, hereinbefore specifically named, of the said "Presidents' agreement," and other corporations which between the 1st day of July, 1891, and the 1st day of July, 1896, had been forced into said "Presidents' agreement," as aforesaid, on or about the 1st day of July, 1896, entered into a certain other agreement in the nature of a pool, thereafter known as the "Pool agreement in 1896;" that the following table contains the names of the members of said pool agreement, together with the percentages of all of the blasting and sporting powders sold by all of the members thereof which each member thereof was permitted under said pool agreement to sell to the trade among the various States without receiving compensation from the pool on account of undersales and without paying a penalty to the pool on account of oversales:

I. du Pont de Nemours and Company is referred to as a party to any act or transaction done subsequently to the month of October, 1899, your petitioner refers to said corporation, or another corporation formed under the same name, as its successor, as hereinafter more particularly alleged, and not to said E. (4) And your petitioner prays for the following specific relief:

(a) That E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company (of Delaware) be enjoined, restrained, and prohibited from exercising any control over the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company (of New Jersey), by the election or appointment of directors, officers, agents, or servants, or in any other manner, and that the E. INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That, for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed 2 first-class battle ships, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $6,000,000 each, similar in all essential characteristics to the battle ship authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I suggested that the Clerk be permitted to read the whole paragraph, in order that it may go into the RECORD. I shall not ask for consideration this evening.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the Clerk had read the paragraph.

Mr. FOSS. I mean the whole subject of the naval programme. It goes down to "Construction of machinery," page 62.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the entire "Increase of the navy," down to page 62, may be read, with the understanding that the amendments may be offered to any particular paragraph.

Mr. FOSS. I simply ask that the paragraphs may be read, and then I will move that the committee rise

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this consists of a number of paragraphs, and one motion to shut off debate would cut off debate on a number of items.

consent that all the paragraphs relating to increase of the navy be put in the RECORD for the information of the House.

USE OF CARRIAGES BY OFFICIALS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the resolution I submitted yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, the morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday. Two resolutions have come over. The first is the resolution submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT]. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 257, submitted on the 20th instant by Mr. FLINT, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, directed to ascertain and report to the Senate whether any officers of the Government, including the army and navy, are devoting to their personal or private use any carriages, automobiles, or other vehicles which are the property of or are provided by the Government.

Mr. FLINT. I ask for the adoption of the resolution. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate Senate resolution 259, submitted yesterday by Mr. Culberson, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all correspondence in the Department of Justice relating to an alleged violation of the act of July 2, 1890, by the American Sugar Refining Company in connection with an alleged loan by that company to one Segal, in which was pledged as security therefor a majority of the capital stock of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company with voting power thereon, and under which it is alleged an agreement was entered into that the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company, should not engage in business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the resolution stated

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Texas if this is not a case that is already in court?

Mr. CULBERSON. This case is not in court by the United tates. The United States has taken no action in the matter.

Mr. KEAN. But it is in court at the present time? Mr. CULBERSON. I think that there is some private litigation pending in the court with reference to the matter, it having been decided on appeal by the United States circuit court for the second circuit that the act of Congress had been violated in this particular case, under the facts stated in the petition.

We want this information, Mr. President, that is in the possession of the Attorney-General, I understand, on a formal complaint by a citizen of Pennsylvania. I ask for the passage of the resolution. I will not take the time of the Senate to explain it, but formal complaint was made quite a while ago to the Attorney-General that the act of Congress had been violated in this case. We want the correspondence, as I am informed it will disclose the position taken by the Department of Justice in the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 676), which was read, ordered to be printed, and with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing: To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the National Conservation Commission, together with the accompanying papers. This report, which is the outgrowth of the conference of governors last , was unanimously approved by the recent joint conference held in this city between the National Conservation Commission and governors of States, state conservation commissions, and conservation committees of great organizations of citizens. It is therefore in a peculiar sense representative of the whole Nation and all its parts.

With the statements and conclusions of this report I heartily concur, and I commend it to the thoughtful consideration both of the Congress and of our people generally. It is one of the most fundamentally important documents ever laid before the American people. It contains the first inventory of its natural resources ever made by any nation. In condensed form it presents a statement of our available capital in material resources, which are the means of progress, and calls attention to the essential conditions upon which the perpetuity, safety, and welfare of this Nation now rest and must always continue to rest. It deserves, and should have, the widest possible distribution among the people.

The facts set forth in this report constitute an imperative call to action. The situation they disclose demands that we, neglecting for a time, if need be, smaller and less vital questions, shall concentrate an effective part of our attention upon the great material foundations of national existence, progress, and prosperity. This first inventory of natural resources prepared by the National Conservation Commission is undoubtedly but the beginning of a series which will be indispensable for dealing intelligently with what we have. It supples as close an approximation to the actual facts as it was possible to prepare with the knowledge and time available. The progress of our knowledge of this country will continually lead to more accurate information and better use of the sources of national strength. But we can not defer action until complete accuracy in the estimates can be reached, because before that time many of our resources will be practically gone. It is not necessary that this inventory should be exact in every minute detail. It is essential that it should correctly describe the general situation; and that the present inventory does. As it stands it is an irrefutable proof that the conservation of our resources is the fundamental question before this Nation, and that our first and greatest task is to set our house in order and begin to live within our means.

The first of all considerations is the permanent welfare of our people; and true moral welfare, the highest form of welfare, can not permanently exist save on a firm and lasting foundation of material well-being. In this respect our situation is far from satisfactory. After every possible allowance has been made, and when every hopeful indication has been given its full weight, the facts still give reason for grave concern. It would be unworthy of our history and our intelligence, and disastrous to our future, to shut our eyes to these facts or attempt to laugh them out of court. The people should and will rightly demand that the great fundamental questions shall be given attention by their representatives. I do not advise hasty or ill-considered action on disputed points, but I do urge, where the facts are known, where the public interest is clear, that neither indifference and inertia, nor adverse private interests, shall be allowed to stand in the way of the public good.

The great basic facts are already well known. We know that our population is now adding about one-fifth to its numbers in ten years, and that by the middle of the present century perhaps one hundred and fifty million Americans, and by its end very many millions more, must be fed and clothed from the products of our soil. With the steady growth in population and the still more rapid increase in consumption our people will hereafter make greater and not less demands per capita upon all the natural resources for their livelihood, comfort, and convenience. It is high time to realize that our responsibility to the coming millions is like that of parents to their children, and that in wasting our resources we are wronging our descendants.

We know now that our rivers can and should be made to serve our people effectively in transportation, but that the vast expenditures for our waterways have not resulted in maintaining, much less in promoting, inland navigation. Therefore, let us take immediate steps to ascertain the reasons and to prepare and adopt a comprehensive plan for inland-waterway navigation that will result in giving the people the benefits for which they have paid but which they have not yet received. We know now that our forests are fast disappearing, that less than one-fifth of them are being conserved, and that no good purpose can be met by failing to provide the relatively small sums needed for the protection, use, and improvement of all forests still owned by the Government, and to enact laws to check the wasteful destruction of the forests in private hands. There are differences of opinion as to many public questions; but the American people stand nearly as a unit for waterway development and for forest protection.

We know now that our mineral resources once exhausted are gone forever, and that the needless waste of them costs us hundreds of human lives and nearly $300,000,000 a year. Therefore, let us undertake without delay the investigations necessary before our people will be in position, through state action or otherwise, to put an end to this huge loss and waste, and conserve both our mineral resources and the lives of the men who take them from the earth.

I desire to make grateful acknowledgment to the men, both in and out of the government service, who have prepared the first inventory of our natural resources. They have made it possible for this nation to take a great step forward. Their work is helping us to see that the greatest questions before us are not partisan questions, but questions upon which men of all parties and all shades of opinion may be united for the common good. Among such questions, on the material side, the conservation of natural resources stands first. It is the bottom round of the ladder on our upward progress toward a condition in which the nation as a whole, and its citizens as individuals, will set national efficiency and the public welfare before personal profit.

The policy of conservation is perhaps the most typical example of the general policies which this Government has made peculiarly its own during the opening years of the present century. The function of our Government is to insure to all its citizens, now and hereafter, their rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. If we of this generation destroy the resources from which our children would otherwise derive their livelihood, we reduce the capacity of our land to support a population, and so either degrade the standard of living or deprive the coming generations of their right to life on this continent. If we allow great industrial organizations to exercise unregulated control of the means of production and the necessaries of life, we deprive the Americans of to-day and of the future of industrial liberty, a right no less precious and vital than political freedom. Industrial liberty was a fruit of political liberty, and in turn has become one of its chief supports, and exactly as we stand for political democracy so we must stand for industrial democracy.

The rights to life and liberty are fundamental, and like other fundamental necessities, when once acquired, they are little dwelt upon. The right to the pursuit of happiness is the right whose presence or absence is most likely to be felt in daily life. In whatever it has accomplished, or failed to accomplish, the administration which is just drawing to a close has at least seen clearly the fundamental need of freedom of opportunity for every citizen. We have realized that the right of every man to live his own life, provide for his family, and endeavor, according to his abilities, to secure for himself and for them a fair share of the good things of existence, should be subject to one limitation and to no other. The freedom of the individual should be limited only by the present and future rights, interests, and needs of the other individuals who make up the community. We should do all in our power to develop and protect individual liberty, individual initiative, but subject always to the need of preserving and promoting the general good. When necessary, the private right must yield, under due process of law and with proper compensation, to the welfare of the commonwealth. The man who serves the community greatly should be greatly rewarded by the community; as there is great inequality of service so there must be great inequality of reward; but no man and no set of men should be allowed to play the game of competition with loaded dice.

All this is simply good common sense. The underlying principle of conservation has been described as the application of common sense to common problems for the common good. If the description is correct, then conservation is the great fundamental basis for national efficiency. In this stage of the world's history to be fearless, to be just, and to be efficient are the three great requirements of national life. National efficiency is the result of natural resources well handled, of freedom of opportunity for every man, and of the inherent capacity, trained ability, knowledge and will, collectively and individually to use that opportunity.

This administration has achieved some things; it has sought, but has not been able, to achieve others; it has doubtless made mistakes; but all it has done or attempted has been in the single, consistent effort to secure and enlarge the rights and opportunities of the men and women of the United States. We are trying to conserve what is good in our social system, and we are striving toward this end when we endeavor to do away with what is bad. Success may be made too hard for some if it is made too easy for others. The rewards of common industry and thrift may be too small if the rewards for other, and on the whole less valuable, qualities, are made too large, and especially if the rewards for qualities which are really, from the public standpoint, undesirable, are permitted to become too large. Our aim is so far as possible to provide such conditions that there shall be equality of opportunity where there is equality of energy, fidelity, and intelligence; when there is a reasonable equality of opportunity the distribution of rewards will take care of itself.

The unchecked existence of monopoly is incompatible with equality of opportunity. The reason for the exercise of government control over great monopolies is to equalize opportunity. We are fighting against privilege. It was made unlawful for corporations to contribute money for election expenses in order to abridge the power of special privilege at the polls. Railroad-rate control is an attempt to secure an equality of opportunity for all men affected by rail transportation; and that means all of us. The great anthracite coal strike was settled, and the pressing danger of a coal famine averted, because we recognized that the control of a public necessity involves a duty to the people, and that public intervention in the affairs of a public-service corporation is neither to be resented as usurpation nor permitted as a privilege by the corporations, but on the contrary to be accepted as a duty and exercised as a right by the Government in the interest of all the people. The efficiency of the army and the navy has been increased so that our people may follow in peace the great work of making this country a better place for Americans to live in, and our navy was sent round the world for the same ultimate purpose. All the acts taken by the Government during the last seven years, and all the policies now being pursued by the Government, fit in as parts of a consistent whole.

Our public-land policy has for its aim the use of the public land so that it will promote local development by the settlement of home makers; the policy we champion is to serve all the people legitimately and openly, instead of permitting the lands to be converted, illegitimately and under cover, to the private benefit of a few. Our forest policy was established so that we might use the public forests for the permanent public good, instead of merely for temporary private gain. The reclamation act, under which the desert parts of the public domain are converted to higher uses for the general benefit, was passed so that more Americans might have homes on the land.

These policies were enacted into law and have justified their enactment. Others have failed, so far, to reach the point of action. Among such is the attempt to secure public control of the open range and thus to convert its benefits to the use of the small man, who is the home maker, instead of allowing it to be controlled by a few great cattle and sheep owners.

The enactment of a pure food law was a recognition of the fact that the public welfare outweighs the right to private gain, and that no man may poison the people for his private profit. The employers' liability bill recognized the controlling fact that while the employer usually has at stake no more than his profit, the stake of the employee is a living for himself and his family.

We are building the Panama Canal; and this means that we are engaged in the giant engineering feat of all time. We are striving to add in all ways to the habitability and beauty of our country. We are striving to hold in the public hands the remaining supply of unappropriated coal, for the protection and benefit of all the people. We have taken the first steps toward the conservation of our natural resources, and the betterment of country life, and the improvement of our waterways. We stand for the right of every child to a childhood free from grinding toil, and to an education; for the civic responsibility and decency of every citizen; for prudent foresight in public matters, and for fair play in every relation of our national and economic life. In international matters we apply a system of diplomacy which puts the obligations of international morality on a level with those that govern the actions of an honest gen-tleman in dealing with his fellow-men. Within our own border we stand for truth and honesty in public and in private life; and we war sternly against wrongdoers of every grade. All these efforts are integral parts of the same attempt, the attempt to enthrone justice and righteousness, to secure freedom of opportunity to all of our citizens, now and hereafter, and to set the ultimate interest of all of us above the temporary interest of any individual, class, or group.

The nation, its government, and its resources exist, first of all, for the American citizen, whatever his creed, race, or birthplace, whether he be rich or poor, educated or ignorant, provided only that he is a good citizen, recognizing his obligations to the nation for the rights and opportunities which he owes to the

The obligations, and not the rights, of citizenship increase in proportion to the increase of a man's wealth or power. time is coming when a man will be judged, not by what he has succeeded in getting for himself from the common store, but by how well he has done his duty as a citizen, and by what the ordinary citizen has gained in freedom of opportunity because of his service for the common good. The highest value we know is that of the individual citizen, and the highest justice is to give him fair play in the effort to realize the best there is in him.

The tasks this nation has to do are great tasks. They can only be done at all by our citizens acting together, and they can be done best of all by the direct and simple application of homely common sense. The application of common sense to homely common sense. common problems for the common good, under the guidance of the principles upon which this republic was based, and by virtue of which it exists, spells perpetuity for the nation, civil and industrial liberty for its citizens, and freedom of oppor-tunity in the pursuit of happiness for the plain American, for whom this nation was founded, by whom it was preserved, and through whom alone it can be perpetuated. Upon this platform—larger than party differences, higher than class prejudice, broader than any question of profit and loss—there is room for every American who realizes that the common good stands

The National Conservation Commission wisely confined its report to the statement of facts and principles, leaving the Executive to recommend the specific steps to which these facts and principles inevitably lead. Accordingly, I call your attention to some of the larger features of the situation disclosed by the report, and to the action thereby clearly demanded for the general good.

WATERS.

The report says:

Within recent months it has been recognized and demanded by the people, through many thousand delegates from all States assembled in convention in different sections of the country, that the waterways should and must be improved promptly and effectively as a means of maintaining national prosperity.

"The first requisite for waterway improvement is the control of the waters in such manner as to reduce floods and regulate the regimen of the navigable rivers. The second requisite is development of terminals and connections in such manner as to regulate commerce."

Accordingly, I urge that the broad plan for the development of our waterways, recommended by the Inland Waterways Commission, be put in effect without delay. It provides for a comprehensive system of waterway improvement extending to all the uses of the waters and benefits to be derived from their control, including navigation, the development of power, the extension of irrigation, the drainage of swamp and overflow lands, the prevention of soil wash, and the purification of streams for water supply. It proposes to carry out the work by coordinating agencies in the federal departments through the medium of an administrative commission or board, acting in cooperation with the States and other organizations and individual citizens.

The work of waterway development should be undertaken ithout delay. Meritorious projects in known conformity with without delay. Meritorious projects in known conformity with the general outlines of any comprehensive plan should proceed The cost of the whole work should be met by direct appropriation if possible, but if necessary by the issue of bonds in small denominations.

It is especially important that the development of water power should be guarded with the utmost care both by the National Government and by the States in order to protect the people against the upgrowth of monopoly and to insure to them a fair share in the benefits which will follow the development of this great asset which belongs to the people and should be controlled by them.

FORESTS.

I urge that provision be made for both protection and more rapid development of the national forests. Otherwise, either the increasing use of these forests by the people must be checked or their protection against fire must be dangerously weakened. If we compare the actual fire damage on similar areas on private and national forest lands during the past year, the government fire patrol saved commercial timber worth as much as the total cost of caring for all national forests at the present rate for about ten years.

I especially commend to the Congress the facts presented by the commission as to the relation between forests and stream flow in its bearing upon the importance of the forest lands in national ownership. Without an understanding of this inti-mate relation the conservation of both these natural resources must largely fail.

The time has fully arrived for recognizing in the law the responsibility to the community, the State, and the nation which rests upon the private owners of private lands. The ownership of forest land is a public trust. The man who would so handle his forest as to cause erosion and to injure stream flow must be not only educated, but he must be controlled.

The report of the National Conservation Commission says:

"Forests in private ownership can not be conserved unless they are protected from fire. We need good fire laws, well enforced. Fire control is impossible without an adequate force of men whose sole duty is fire patrol during the dangerous season.

I hold as first among the tasks before the States and the nation in their respective shares in forest conservation the organization of efficient fire patrols and the enactment of good fire laws on the part of the States.

The report says further:

Present tax laws prevent reforestation of cut-over land and the perpetuation of existing forests by use. An annual tax upon the land itself, exclusive of the timber, and a tax upon the timber when cut is well adapted to actual conditions of forest investment and is practicable and certain. It is far better that forest land should pay a moderate tax permanently than that it should pay an excessive revenue temporarily and then cease to yield at all."

Second only in importance to good fire laws well enforced is the enactment of tax laws which will permit the perpetuation of existing forests by use.

With our increasing population the time is not far distant when the problem of supplying our people with food will become pressing. The possible additions to our arable area are not great, and it will become necessary to obtain much larger crops from the land, as is now done in more densely settled countries. To do this, we need better farm practice and better strains of wheat, corn, and other crop plants, with a reduction in losses from soil erosion and from insects, animals, and other enemies of agriculture. The United States Department of Agriculture is doing excellent work in these directions and it should be liberally supported.

The remaining public lands should be classified and the arable lands disposed of to home makers. In their interest the timber and stone act and the commutation clause of the homestead act should be repealed, and the desert-land law should be modified in accordance with the recommendations of the Public Lands Commission.

The use of the public grazing lands should be regulated in such ways as to improve and conserve their value.

Rights to the surface of the public land should be separated from rights to forests upon it and to minerals beneath it, and these should be subject to separate disposal.

The coal, oil, gas, and phosphate rights still remaining with the Government should be withdrawn from entry and leased under conditions favorable for economic development.

MINERALS.

The accompanying reports show that the consumption of nearly all of our mineral products is increasing more rapidly than our population. Our mineral waste is about one-sixth of our product, or nearly $1,000,000 for each working day in the year. The loss of structural materials through fire is about another million a day. The loss of life in the mines is appalling. The larger part of these losses of life and property can be avoided.

Our mineral resources are limited in quantity and can not be increased or reproduced. With the rapidly increasing rate of consumption the supply will be exhausted while yet the nation is in its infancy, unless better methods are devised or substi-tutes are found. Further investigation is urgently needed in order to improve methods and to develop and apply substitutes. It is of the utmost importance that a Bureau of Mines be established in accordance with the pending bill to reduce the loss of life in mines and the waste of mineral resources and to investigate the methods and substitutes for prolonging the dura-tion of our mineral supplies. Both the need and the public demand for such a bureau are rapidly becoming more urgent. It should cooperate with the States in supplying data to serve as a basis for state mine regulations. The establishment of this bureau will mean merely the transfer from other bureaus of work which it is agreed should be transferred and slightly enlarged and reorganized for these purposes.

CONCLUSIONS.

The joint conference already mentioned adopted two resolu-tions to which I call your special attention. The first was intended to promote cooperation between the States and the nation upon all of the great questions here discussed. It is as

"Resolved, That a joint committee be appointed by the chairman, to consist of six members of state conservation commis-sions and three members of the National Conservation Commission, whose duty it shall be to prepare and present to the state and national commissions, and through them to the governors and the President, a plan for united action by all organizations concerned with the consequent of present the consequent of the state of the concerned with the conservation of natural resources. (On motion of Governor Noel, of Mississippi, the chairman and secre-tary of the conference were added to and constituted a part of this committee.)"

The second resolution of the joint conference to which I refer calls upon the Congress to provide the means for such cooperation. The principle of the community of interest among all our people in the great natural resources runs through the report of the National Conservation Commission and the proceedings of the joint conference. These resources, which form the common basis of our welfare, can be wisely developed, rightly used, and prudently conserved only by the common action of all the people, acting through their representatives in State and nation. Hence the fundamental necessity for cooperation. Without it we shall accomplish but little, and that little badly. The resolution

"We also especially urge on the Congress of the United States the high desirability of maintaining a national commission on the conservation of the resources of the country, empowered to cooperate with state commissions to the end that every sovereign commonwealth and every section of the country may attain the high degree of prosperity and the sureness of perpetuity naturally arising in the abundant resources and the vigor, intelligence, and patriotism of our people."

In this recommendation I most heartily concur, and I urge that an appropriation of at least $50,000 be made to cover the expenses of the National Conservation Commission for necessary rent, assistance, and traveling expenses. This is a very small sum. I know of no other way in which the appropriation of so small a sum would result in so large a benefit to the whole

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 22, 1909.

National Conservation Commission, Washington, January 11, 1999.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION COMMISSION,
Washington, January 11, 1909.

Sir: Herewith I have the honor to place in your hands the report of the National Conservation Commission, created by you June 8, 1908, to inquire into and advise you as to the condition of our natural resources, and to cooperate with other bodies created for similar purposes by the States.

The executive committee designated in your letter creating the commission organized on June 19 and outlined a plan for making an inventory of the natural resources of the United States. On July 1 work was undertaken, accordingly, with the cooperation of the bureaus of the federal departments, authorities of the different States, and representative bodies of the national industries. The results of this cooperative work are herewith submitted as appendices of the commission's report.

The mass of material which constitutes the inventory has been summarized under the direction of the secretaries of the respective sections of the commission so as to assemble the most salient points of the inventory. At the first general meeting of the commission, on December 1, 1908, the summaries of the four sections of the commission were presented and were supplemented by personal statements of the experts in the several bureaus in the executive departments who had immediate charge of the inventory along their special lines of work. After the discussion of the summaries and statements the commission united in the report which is hewith submitted.

In view of the peculiarly valuable contributions and services rendered by the experts of the several departments, the commission at is closing session unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas the commission, in the discharge of the duties committed to it, has been greatly aided by the patient labors and the ability and zeal of its secretary and the secretary of each of its four sections, and of the experts in the government service who lent their assistance in the collection of statistical and other data necessary to th

"Resolved, That the commission hereby makes cordial acknowledgment of its obligation to the gentlemen referred to and tenders them its thanks.

"Resolved further, That the secretary of the commission be directed to transmit to each of those who prepared papers and who appeared before the commission a copy of these resolutions."

In addition, I desire to call your special attention to the spirit and devotion of the gentlemen without whose services the making of the national inventory would have been impossible. Through their great interest in the task intrusted by you to the commission and to them a great part of their work in connection with the inventory was performed outside the official hours. Furthermore, the material which they have prepared presents valuable information in connection with the work of the several executive departments, which otherwise would not have been collected at this time. The assembling of this vast amount of material is largely due to Mr. Henry Gannett, whom you designated for this work, and to whose expert knowledge and power of generalization the commission owes more than it can repay.

In its cooperation "with other bodies created for similar purposes by the States," the National Conservation Commission has had most valuable assistance. Within the first month after the creation of the commissions, and an equal number of organizations of national scope had named conservation committees. At the time of the recent joint conservation conference 33 States and Territories had formed conservation commissions, and an equal number has now increased to 36, with indications that nearly all of the remaining States will soon take similar action. The number of national organizations which have appointed conservation committees is 41.

The report herewith submitted was unanimously approved by the joint conservation commission commissions and 3 members of the National Conservation Commission of national resources. By this action the conservation movement enters the field of definite constructive

The PRESIDENT, The White House.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CONSERVATION COMMISSION.

The duty of man to man, on which the integrity of nations must rest, is no higher than the duty of each generation to the next; and the obligation of the Nation to each actual citizen is no more sacred than the obligation to the citizen to be, who, in turn, must bear the Nation's duties and responsibilities.

In this country, blessed with natural resources in unsurpassed profusion, the sense of responsibility to the future has been slow to awaken. Beginning without appreciation of the measure or the value of natural resources other than land with water for commercial uses, our forefathers pushed into the wilderness and, through a spirit of enterprise which is the glory of the Nation, developed other great resources. Forests were cleared away as obstacles to the use of the land; iron and coal were discovered and developed, though for years their presence added nothing to the price of the land; and through the use of native woods and metals and fuels, manufacturing grew beyond all precedent, and the country became a power among the nations of the world.

Gradually the timber growing on the ground, and the iron and coal within the ground, came to have a market value and were bought and sold as sources of wealth. Meanwhile, vast holdings of these resources were acquired by those of greater foresight than their neighbors before it was generally realized that they possessed value in themselves; and in this way large interests, assuming monopolistic proportions, grew up, with greater enrichment to their holders than the world had seen before, and with the motive of immediate profit, with no concern for the future or thought of the permanent benefit of country and people, a wasteful and profligate use of the resources began and has continued. The waters, at first recognized only as aids to commerce in supplying transportation routes, were largely neglected. In time this neglect began to be noticed, and along with it the destruction and approaching exhaustion of the fores sources, men began to realize that the permanent welfare of the country as well as the prosperity of their offspring were at stake.

The newly awakened sense of duty found expression in a call by the President upon the governors of the States to meet him in conference, and in the declaration of this conference at its sessions in the White House in May, 1908. The action of the conference led to the appointment of the National Conservation Commission, with authority to collect information and cooperate with similar commissions appointed by the States in the great work of conserving the natural resources of the country.

the States in the great work of conserving the natural resources of the country.

In the growth of the country and gradual development of the natural resources there have been three noteworthy stages. The first stage was that of individual enterprise for personal and family benefit. It led to the conquest of the wilderness.

The next stage was that of collective enterprise, either for the benefit of communities or for the profit of individuals forming the communities. It led to the development of cities and States, and too often to the growth of great monopolies.

The third stage is the one we are now entering. Within it the enterprise is collective and largely cooperative, and should be directed toward the larger benefit of communities, States, and the people generally.

In the first stage the resources received little thought. In the second they were wastefully used. In the stage which we are entering wise and beneficial uses are essential, and the checking of waste is absolutely demanded.

Although the natural resources are interrelated they are unlike, and demanded.

Although the natural resources are interrelated they are unlike, and each class requires distinct treatment. The land is a fixed quantity which can not be materially increased, though its productivity and availability for the uses of man may be greatly augmented; the forests are variable in quantity and may be destroyed by fire, waste, and improvident use, or protected and improved in such way as to meet human necessities. Together the lands and the forests are improvable resources. The minerals are limited in quantity and can not be increased or improved by anything which man may do. They are expendable resources.

Sources.

The fresh waters are limited in quantity, though the supply is permanent. They form a naturally renewable resource which man may do nothing to increase, but may do much in the way of conservation and better utilization.

The treatment applied to each class should be adapted to its own fullest development and best utilization and to those of the other classes of resources.

The treatment applied to each class should be adapted to its own fullest development and best utilization and to those of the other classes of resources.

The waste which most urgently requires checking varies widely in character and amount. The most reprehensible waste is that of destruction, as in forest fires, uncontrolled flow of gas and oil, soil wash, and abandonment of coal in the mines. This is attributable, for the most part, to ignorance, indifference, or false notions of economy, to rectify which is the business of the people collectively.

Nearly as reprehensible is the waste arising from misuse, as in the consumption of fuel in furnaces and engines of low efficiency, the loss of water in floods, the employment of ill-adapted structural materials, the growing of ill-chosen crops, and the perpetuation of inferior stocks of plants and animals, all of which may be remedied.

Reprehensible in less degree is the waste arising from nonuse. Since the utilization of any one resource is necessarily progressive and dependent on social and industrial conditions and the concurrent development of other resources, nonuse is sometimes unavoidable. It becomes reprehensible when it affects the common welfare and entails future injury. Then, it should be rectified in the general interest.

For the prevention of waste the most effective means will be found in the increase and diffusion of knowledge, from which is sure to result an aroused public sentiment demanding prevention. The people have the matter in their own hands. They may prevent or limit the destruction of resources and restrain misuse through the enactment and enforcement of appropriate state and federal laws.

At every stage in the growth of our country, strong men grew stronger through the exercise of nation building, and their intelligence and patriotism grew with their strength. The spirit and vigor of our people are the chief glory of the Republic. Yet even as we have neglected our natural resources, so have we been thoughtles

The mineral production of the United States for 1907 exceeded $2,000,000,000, and contributed 65 per cent of the total frieght traffic of the country. The waste in the extraction and treatment of mineral products during the same year was equivalent to more than $300,000,000.

The production for 1907 included 395,000,000 tons of bituminous and $5,000,000 tons of anthractice coal, 166,000,000 tons of bituminous and $5,000,000 tons of nhosphate rock, and $69,000,000 pounds of copper. The values of other mineral products during the same year included clay products, $162,000,000; stone, $71,000,000; cement, $56,000,000; natural gas, $50,000,000; stone, $71,000,000; silver, $37,000,000; lead, $39,000,000; and zinc, $26,000,000.

The available and easily accessible supplies of coal in the United States aggregate approximately 1,400,000,000,000 tons. At the present increasing rate of production this supply will be so depleted as to approach exhaustion before the middle of the next century.

The known supply of high-grade iron ores in the United States approximates 3,840,000,000 tons, which at the present increasing rate of consumption can not be expected to last beyond the middle of the present century. In addition to this, there are assumed to be 59,000,000,000 tons of lower grade iron ores which are not available for use under existing conditions.

The supply of stone, clay, cement, lime, sand, and salt is ample, while the stock of the precious metals and of copper, lead, zinc, sulphur, asphalt, graphite, quicksilver, mica, and the rare metals can not well be estimated, but is clearly exhaustible within one to three centuries unless unexpected deposits be found.

The known supply of petroleum is estimated at 15,000,000,000 to 20,000,000,000 barrels, distributed through six separate fields having an aggregate area of 8,900 square miles. The production is rapidly increasing, while the wastes and the loss through misuse are enormous. The supply can not be expected to last beyond the middle of the present century.

Increasing, while the wastes and the loss through misuse are enormous. The supply can not be expected to last beyond the middle of the present century.

The known natural-gas fields aggregate an area of 9,000 square miles, distributed through 22 States. Of the total yield from these fields during 1907, 400,000,000,000 cubic feet, valued at $62,000,000, were utilized, while an equal quantity was allowed to escape into the air. The daily waste of natural gas—the most perfect known fuel—is over 1,000,000,000,000 cubic feet, or enough to supply every city in the United States of over 100,000 population.

Phosphate rock, used for fertilizer, represents the slow accumulation of organic matter during past ages. In most countries it is scrupulously preserved; in this country it is extensively exported, and largely for this reason its production is increasing rapidly. The original supply can not long withstand the increasing demand.

The consumption of nearly all our mineral products is increasing far more rapidly than our population. In many cases the waste is increasing more rapidly than the number of our people. In 1776 but a few dozen pounds of iron were in use by the average family; now our annual consumption is over 1,200 pounds per capita. In 1812 no coal was used; now the consumption is over 5 tons and the waste nearly 3 tons per capita.

While the production of coal is increasing enormously, the waste and loss in mining are diminishing. At the beginning of our mineral development the coal abandoned in the mine was two or three times the amount taken out and used. Now the mine waste averages little more than half the amount saved. The chief waste is in imperfect combustion in furnaces and fire boxes. Steam engines utilize on the average about 8 per cent of the thermal energy of the coal, Internal-combustion engines utilize less than 20 per cent, and in electric lighting far less than 1 per cent of the thermal energy is rendered available.

With increasing industries new mineral resources become available from ti

With increasing industries new mineral resources become available from time to time. Some lignites and other low-grade coals are readily gasified and, through the development of internal-combustion engines, check the consumption of high-grade coals. Peat is becoming important; it is estimated that 14,000,000,000 tons are available in the United States. Its value is enhanced because of distribution through States generally remote from the fields of coal, oil, and natural gas.

The uses of all our mineral resources are interdependent. This is especially true of coal and iron, of which neither can be produced or used without aid from the other, and in the production or reduction of all other minerals both coal and iron are employed. The same standard minerals are necessary to the development of power, of which the use is increasing more rapidly than that of any other commodity.

The building operations of the country now aggregate about $1,000,000,000 per year. The direct and indirect losses from fire in the United States during 1907 approximated $450,000,000, or one-half the cost of construction. Of this loss four-fifths, or an average of $1,000,000 per day, could be prevented, as shown by comparison with the standards of construction and fire losses in the larger European countries.

So far as the ores are taken from the mines and reduced to metals, countries.

So far as the ores are taken from the mines and reduced to metals, these resources are capitalized; but after thus being changed to a more valuable form they should be so used as to reduce to a minimum the loss by rust, electrolytic action, and other waste.

There is urgent need for greater safety to the miner. The loss of life through mine accidents is appalling, and preventive measures can not be taken too soon.

The National Government should exercise such control of the mineral fuels and phosphate rocks now in its possession as to check waste and prolong our supply.

While the distribution and quantity of most of our important mineral substances are known in a general way, there is imperative need for further surveys and investigations and for researches concerning the less-known minerals.

LANDS.

The total land area of continental United States is 1,900,000,000 acres. Of this but little more than two-fifths is in farms, and less than one-half of the farm area is improved and made a source of crop production. We have nearly 6,000,000 farms. They average 146 acres each. The value of the farms is nearly one-fourth the wealth of the United States. There are more than 300,000,000 acres of public grazing land. The number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits is more than 10,000,000.

States. There are more than 300,000 acres of public grazing land. The number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits is more than 10,000,000.

We grow one-fifth of the world's wheat crop, three-fifths of its cotton crop, and four-fifths of its corn crop. We plant nearly 50,000,000 acres of wheat annually, with an average yield of about 14 bushels per acre; 100,000,000 acres of corton, yielding an average of 25 bushels. per acre; and 30,000,000 acres of cotton, yielding about 12,000,000 bales.

We had on January 1, 1908, 71,000,000 cattle, worth $1,250,000,000; 54,000,000 sheep, worth $211,000,000; and 56,000,000 swine, worth $339,000,000. The census of 1900 showed $137,000,000 worth of poultry in this country, which produced in 1899 293,000,000 dozen eggs.

There has been a slight increase in the average yield of our great staple farm products, but neither the increase in acreage nor the yield per acre has kept pace with our increase in population. Within a century we shall probably have to feed three times as many people as now; and the main bulk of our food supply must be grown on our own soil.

The area of cultivated land may possibly be doubled. In addition to the land awaiting the plow, 75,000,000 acres of swamp land can be reclaimed, 40,000,000 acres of desert land irrigated, and millions of acres of brush and wooded land cleared. Our population will increase continuously, but there is a definite limit to the increase of our cultivated acreage. Hence we must greatly increase the yield per acre. The average yield of wheat in the United States is less than 14 bushels per acre, in Germany 28 bushels, and in England 32 bushels. We get 30 bushels of oats per acre, England nearly 45, and Germany more than 47. Our soils are fertile, but our mode of farming neither conserves the soil nor secures full crop returns. Soil fertility need not be diminished, but may be increased. The large yields now obtained from farms in Europe which have been cultivated for a thousand years prove this conclusively, Proper manage

The greatest unnecessary loss of our soil is preventable erosion. Second only to this is the waste, nonuse, and misuse of fertilizer derived from animals and men.

Second only to this is the waste, nonuse, and misuse of fertilizer derived from animals and men.

The losses to farm products due to injurious mammals is estimated at $130,000,000 annually; the loss through plant diseases reaches several hundred million dollars; and the loss through insects is reckoned at $659,000,000. The damage by birds is balanced by their beneficent work in destroying noxious insects. Losses due to the elements are large, but no estimate has been made of them. Losses to live stock from these causes are diminishing because of protection and feeding during winter. The annual losses from disease among domestic animals are: Horses, 1.8 per cent; cattle, 2 per cent; sheep, 2.2 per cent; and swine, 5.1 per cent. Most of these farm losses are preventable.

There is a tendency toward consolidation of farm lands. The estimated area of abandoned farms is 16,000 square miles, or about 3 per cent of the improved land. The causes of abandonment differ in different parts of the country. Where most prevalent, it is caused principally by erosion and exhaustion of the soil.

The product of the fisheries of the United States has an annual value of $57,000,000. Fish culture is carried on by the Nation and the States on an enormous scale. Most of the more important food species are propagated, and several species are maintained in that way. Fish from forest waters furnish $21,000,000 worth of food yearly, a supply dependent on the preservation of the forests.

Our wild game and fur-bearing animals have been largely exterminated. To prevent their complete extinction, the States and the United States have taken in hand their protection, and their numbers are now increasing. Forest game yields over $10,000,000 worth of food each year.

With game birds the story is much the same—wanton destruction

With game birds the story is much the same—wanton destruction until the number has been greatly reduced, followed in recent years by wise protection, which in some cases allows the remnant to survive and increase wise protection, which in some cases allows the remnant to survive and even to increase.

Each citizen of the United States owns an equal undivided interest in about 375,000,000 acres of public lands, exclusive of Alaska and the insular possessions. Besides this there are about 235,000,000 acres of national forests, national parks, and other lands devoted to public use. Good business sense demands that a definite land policy be formulated. The National Conservation Commission believes that the following will serve as a basis therefor:

1. Every part of the public lands should be devoted to the use which will best subserve the interests of the whole people.

2. The classification of all public lands is necessary for their administration in the interests of the people.

3. The timber, the minerals, and the surface of the public lands should be disposed of separately.

4. Public lands more valuable for conserving water supply, timber, and natural beauties or wonders than for agriculture should be held for the use of the people from all except mineral entry.

5. Title to the surface of the remaining nonmineral public lands should be granted only to actual home makers.

6. Pending the transfer of title to the remaining public lands they should be administered by the Government and their use should be allowed in a way to prevent or control waste and monopoly.

The present public land laws as a whole do not subserve the best interests of the nation. They should be modified so far as may be required to bring them into conformity with the foregoing outline of policy.

FORESTS.

FORESTS.

Next to our need of food and water comes our need of timber.
Our industries which subsist wholly or mainly upon wood pay the wages of more than 1,500,000 men and women.
Forests not only grow timber, but they hold the soil and they conserve the streams. They abate the wind and give protection from excessive heat and cold. Woodlands make for the fiber, health, and happiness of the citizen and the nation.
Our forests now cover 550,000,000 acres, or about one-fourth of the United States. The original forests covered not less than 850,000,000

United States. The original forests covered not less than $50,000,000 acres.

Forests publicly owned cover one-fourth of the total forest area and contain one-fifth of all our standing timber. Forests privately owned cover three-fourths of the area and contain four-fifths of the standing timber. The timber privately owned is not only four times that publicly owned, but is generally more valuable.

Forestry is now practiced on 70 per cent of the forests publicly owned and on less than 1 per cent of the forests privately owned, or on only 18 per cent of the total area of forests.

The yearly growth of wood in our forests does not average more than 12 cubic feet per acre. This gives a total yearly growth of less than 7,000,000,000 cubic feet.

We have 200,000,000 acres of mature forests, in which yearly growth is balanced by decay: 250,000,000 acres partly cut over or burned over, but restocking naturally with enough young growth to produce a merchantable crop, and 100,000,000 acres cut over and burned over, by the total from our forests yearly including weste in leaving and including the leaving which young growth is lacking or too scanty to make merchantable timber.

We take from our forests yearly, including waste in logging and in manufacture, 23,000,000,000 cubic feet of wood. We use each year 100,000,000,000 posts, poles, and fence rails; 118,000,000 hewn ties; 1,500,000,000 staves; over 133,000,000 sets of heading; nearly 500,000,000 barrel hoops; 3,000,000 cords of native pulp wood; 165,000,000 cubic feet of round mine timbers, and 1,250,000 cords of wood for distillation.

Since 1870 forest fires have destroyed a yearly average of 50 lives and $50,000,000 worth of timber. Not less than 50,000,000 acres of forest is burned over yearly. The woung growth destroyed by fire is worth far more than the merchantable timber burned.

One-fourth of the standing timber is lost in logging. The boxing of long-leaf pine for turpentine has destroyed one-fifth of the forests worked. The loss in the mill is from one-third to two-thirds of the timber sawed. The loss of mill product in seasoning and fitting for use is from one-seventh to one-fourth.

Of each 1,000 feet which stood in the forest, an average of only 320 feet of lumber is used.

We take from our forests each year, not counting the loss by fire, three and a half times their yearly growth. We take 40 cubic feet per acre for each 12 cubic feet grown; we take 260 cubic feet per capita, while Germany uses 37 and France 25 cubic feet.

We tax our forests under the general property tax, a method abandoned long ago by every other great nation. Present tax laws prevent reforestation of cut-over land and the perpetuation of existing forests by use.

Great damage is done to standing timber by injurious forest insects. Much of this damage can be prevented at small expense.

To protect our farms from wind and to reforest land best suited for forest growth will require tree planting on an area larger than Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia combined. Lands so far successfully planted make a total area smaller than Rhode Island; and year by year, through careless cutting and fires, we lower the capacity of existing forests to produce their like again, or else totally desiroy them.

In spite of substitutes we shall always need much wood. So far our use of it has steadily increased. The condition of the world's supply of timber makes us already dependent upon what we produce. We send out of our country one and a half three as much timber as we bring in. Except for finishing woods, relatively small in amount, we must grow our own supply or go without. Until we pay for our lumber what it costs to grow it, as well as what it costs to log and saw, the price will continue to rise.

The preservation by use, under the methods of practical forestry, of all public forest lands, either in state or federal ownership, is essential to the permanent public welfare. In many forest States the acquirement of additional forest lands as state forests is necessary to the best interests of the States themselves.

The conservation of our mountain forests, as in the Appalachian system, is a national necessity. These forests are required to aid in the regulation of streams used for navigation and other purposes. The conservation of these forests is impracticable through private enterprise alone, by any State alone, or by the Federal Government alone. Effective and immediate cooperation between these three agencies is essential. Federal ownership of limited protective areas upon important watersheds, effective state fire patrol, and the cooperation of private forest owners are all required.

The true remedy for unwise tax laws lies not in laxity in their application nor in special exem tial. Federal ownership of limited protective areas upon important watersheds, effective state fire patrol, and the cooperation of private forest owners are all required.

The true remedy for unwise tax laws lies not in laxity in their application nor in special exemption, but in a change in the method of taxation. An annual tax upon the land itself, exclusive of the value of the timber, and a tax upon the timber when cut, is well adapted to actual conditions of forest investment, and is practicable and certain. It is far better that forest land should pay a moderate tax permanently than that it should pay an excessive revenue temporarily and then cease to pay at all.

Forests in private ownership can not be conserved unless they are protected from fire. We need good fire laws, well enforced. Fire control is impossible without an adequate force of men whose sole duty is fire patrol during the dangerous season.

The conservative use of the forest and of timber by American citizens will not be general until they learn how to practice forestry. Through a vigorous national campaign in education, forestry has taken root in the great body of American citizenship. The basis already exists upon which to build a structure of forest conservation which will endure. This needs the definite commitment of state governments and the Federal Government to their inherent duty of teaching the people how to care for their forests. The final responsibility both for investigative work in forestry and for making its results known rests upon the States and upon the Nation.

By reasonable thrift, we can produce a constant timber supply beyond our present need, and with it conserve the usefulness of our streams for irrigation, water supply, navigation, and power. Under right management, our forests will yield over four times as much as now. We can reduce waste in the woods and in the mill at least one-third, with present as well as future profit. We can perpetuate the naval stores industry. Preservative treatment will reduce by one-fift

WATERS.

WATERS.

The sole source of our fresh water is rainfall, including snow. From this source all running, standing, and ground waters are derived. The habitability of the country depends on these waters. Our mean annual rainfall is about 30 Inches; the quantity about 215,000,000,000,000 cubic feet per year, equivalent to ten Mississippi rivers.

Of the total rainfall, over half is evaporated; about a third flows into the sea; the remaining sixth is either consumed or absorbed. These portions are sometimes called, respectively, the "fly-off," the "run-off," and the "cut-off." They are partly interchangeable. About a third of the run-off, or a tenth of the entire rainfall, passes through the Mississippi. The run-off is increasing with deforestation and cultivation.

Of the 70,000,000,000,000 cubic feet annually flowing into the sea, less than 1 per cent is restrained and utilized for municipal and community supply; less than 2 per cent (or some 10 per cent of that in the arid and semiarid regions) is used for irrigation; perhaps 5 per cent is used for navigation, and less than 5 per cent for power.

For municipal and community water supply there are protected catchment areas aggregating over 600,000 acres, and over $250,000,000 are invested in waterworks, with nearly as much more in the appurtenant catchment areas and other lands. The population so supplied approaches 10,000,000, and the annual consumption is about 37,500,000,000 cubic feet. The better managed systems protect the catchment areas by forests and grass; the water is controlled and the storm product used, but there is large waste after the water enters the mains.

For irrigation it is estimated that there are $200,000,000 invested in

For irrigation it is estimated that there are $200,000,000 invested in dams, ditches, reservoirs, and other works for the partial control of the waters: and that 1.500,000,000,000 cubic feet are annually diverted to irrigable lands, aggregating some 20,000 square miles. Except in some cases through forestry, few catchment areas are controlled, and few reservoirs are large enough to hold the storm waters. The waste in the public and private projects exceeds 60 per cent, while no more than 25 per cent of the water actually available for irrigation of the arid lands is restrained and diverted.

There are in continental United States 282 streams navigated for an aggregate of 26,115 miles, and as much more navigable if improved. There are also 45 canals, aggregating 2.189 miles, besides numerous abandoned canals. Except through forestry in recent years, together with a few reservoirs and canal locks and movable dams, there has been little effort to control headwaters or catchment areas in the interests of navigation, and none of our rivers are navigated to more than a small fraction even of their effective low-water capacity.

The water power now in use is 5,250,000 horsepower; the amount running over government dams and not used is about 1,400,000 horsepower; the amount reasonably available equals or exceeds the entire mechanical power now in use, or enough to operate every mill, drive every spindle, propel every train and boat, and light every city. For irrigation it is estimated that there are $200,000,000 invested in town, and village in the country. While the utilization of water power ranks among our most recent and most rapid industrial developments, and the country was a propose, though most plants effect local control through reservoirs and other works. Nearly all the freshet and flood water runs to waste, and the low waters which limit the efficiency of power plants are increasing in frequency and duration with the increasing the recent of the country of the

It has recently been declared by a majority of our leading statesmen that it is an imperative duty to enter upon a systematic improvement, on a large and comprehensive plan, just to all portions of the country, of the waterways and harbors and great lakes, whose natural adaptability to the increasing traffic of the land is one of the greatest gifts of a benign Providence, while the minority indorsed the movement for control of the waterways still more specifically and in equally emphatic terms.

of a beingn Frowleence, while the minority industred the movement for control of the waterways still more specifically and in equally emphatic terms.

Within recent months it has been recognized and demanded by the people, through many thousand delegates from all States assembled in convention in different sections of the country, that the waterways should and must be improved promptly and effectively as a means of maintaining national prosperity.

The first requisite for waterway improvement is the control of the waters in such manner as to reduce floods and regulate the regimen of the navigable rivers. The second requisite is development of terminals and connections in such manner as to regulate commerce.

In considering the uses and benefits to be derived from the waters, the paramount use should be water supply; next should follow navigation in humid regions and irrigation in arid regions. The development of power on the navigable and source streams should be coordinated with the primary and secondary uses of the waters. Other things equal, the development of power should be encouraged, not only to reduce the drain on other resources, but because properly designed reservoirs and power plants retard the run-off and so aid in the control of the streams for navigation and other bess.

Broad plans should be adopted providing for a system of waterway improvement extending to all uses of the waters and benefits to be derived from their control, including the clarification of the water and abatement of floods for the benefit of navigation; the extension of irrigation; the development and application of power; the prevention of soil wash; the purification of streams for water supply; and the drainage and utilization of the waters of swamp and overflow lands.

To promote and perfect these plans, scientific investigations, surveys, and measurements should be continued and extended, especially the more accurate determination of rainfall and evaporation, the investigation and measurement of ground water, the gauging of streams and determination of sediment, and topographic surveys of catchment areas and sites available for control of the waters for navigation and related purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter]. The Secretary will read it again for the information of

The Secretary. On page 2, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "the erection in the city of Washington of a monument" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the construction of a suitable memorial," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

Be it further resolved, It is hereby recommended that action be taken looking to the construction of a suitable memorial which shall be worthy his great fame, his service to humanity and to his country, and fittingly commemorate the grandeur of character, the nobility of life, and the epoch-making career of Abraham Lincoln.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment I offered yesterday and move to strike out the last paragraph of the joint resolution beginning with line 14, page 2, and to substitute in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania withdraws his amendment proposed yesterday and offers in lieu thereof an amendment which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Strike out all of the last paragraph of the joint resolution, beginning in line 14, and in lieu thereof insert:

Be it further resolved, That with a view to the construction of a suitable memorial to commemorate the public services and character of Abraham Lincoln, which memorial shall include a great national highway, to be called "The Lincoln Way," from Washington to the battle-field of Gettysburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses in making a survey for said highway.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I have no apology to make for seeking to add this provision to the joint resolution before the Senate. I want to make whatever measure is passed here mean something and amount to something.

The joint resolution as it was reported from the committee recommends that the 12th day of next February shall be observed as a general holiday. It recommends that public meetings be held and eulogistic speeches uttered commemorative of the life, the character, and the services of the martyred President. But, Mr. President, that is what we have been doing for the memory of Lincoln for the past forty-four years, and I think if the American people ever intend to do anything more than talk about him, there is no more fit occasion than the centennial celebration of his birth to at least take the first step toward doing something more substantial than talk.

Mr. President, I do not regard that the adoption of the amendment I have proposed necessarily commits the people of the United States or the Congress of the United States to any particular form of a memorial to Mr. Lincoln, but I ask simply that the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary for that purpose, be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to make a survey for a great national highway to be known as the "Lincoln way," which shall be a part of such memorial as Congress shall ultimately adopt for his

It would be perfectly useless for me to undertake to say why this thing should be done. The mere announcement, I think, of the proposition that we should now do something substantial is as strong an argument as one could put up in its favor. I seriously hope that to the extent at least of this appropriation the Senate will be willing to vote something substantial for the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. WETMORE. Mr. President, I have but a word to say in regard to this matter.

It seems to me that the joint resolution looking toward the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of Lincoln's birth this year should pass without delay. The Senator from Montana yesterday offered an amendment which was agreed to to-day which does not commit the Senate or the Congress, if it should be passed, to any particular plan. I should be very sorry to have any complication come up on account of trying to do anything toward a committal.

I may say that there are several propositions in regard to the location of a Lincoln memorial. There is first, and the oldest, the Park Commission plan, which would locate it somewhere on the Potomac River. There is a bill from the House which looks toward a possible location, if proper expert authorities should say that it is a suitable place, between the Capitol and the Union Station. Then there is also a bill introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania looking toward a great highroad from here to Gettysburg.

I trust that the question of site may not be brought in here to-day, and that the joint resolution may be passed as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Montana, which commits Congress to nothing, but does suggest that the matter be

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the joint resolution as it comes from the committee I believe will meet the approbation of all the Members of this body. I regret myself that the Senator from Pennsylvania has seen fit to complicate it with what may be a doubtful proposition as to the method of recognizing the great abilities of the dead President. He proposes to strike out the resolves, which I understand, as it has been amended, reads-

It is hereby recommended that action be taken looking to the construction of a suitable memorial.

I should think that that is enough to add to the joint resolution. It would be better if we added nothing to a measure of this character and simply made the birthday a holiday in this District and in the Territories, as was contemplated.

For myself I do not believe a public highway between here and Gettysburg would be a proper and suitable recognition of the services of that great man. I am not going to discuss it. It is true the Senator said it does not commit us to it, but if we spend $50,000 in making an examination, it will be an indication to the people that we propose some such memorial.

Mr. President, I should think, after making Lincoln's birthday a holiday, it would be well to wait for some expression of the people of the country generally as to what is a suitable memorial. For myself, Mr. President, when Senators talk about the old Appian Way, which was built by a tyrant, I do not think it is well for us to make that a precedent for building a road.

Mr. BACON. I desire to state, with the permission of the Senator, that the Appian Way was not built as a memorial to anyone.

Mr. TELLER. No; but it was built by an old tyrant to commemorate his public services, I understand.

Mr. BACON. No. Mr. TILLMAN. It was built by a censor.

Mr. BACON. I took the liberty of making the suggestion to the Senator, because it was stated on the floor that the Appian Way had been built as a memorial to Appius Claudius. The truth is that Appius Claudius was the man who constructed it, and that is the way it got the name.

Mr. TILLMAN. He began it.

Mr. BACON. He began it, of course, and it was a great highway for military purposes.

Mr. TELLER. It is not of much matter whether it was one way or the other. It is a notable highway and has been for many thousands of years. I do not myself consider the building of a highway to Gettysburg or any other point on the American continent a proper method of recognizing the distinguished services of Abraham Lincoln. I am not prepared to-day to vote for it, and I do not believe any other Member of the Senate except the mover is.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I think the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] have justified at least a temporary stopping of the attempt to add to the joint resolution what the Senator from Colorado objects to. There is not anyone here who objects to setting aside and commemorating the 12th of February as a special holiday, as the original resolution contemplated. I think the Senator has summed it all up in the statement he made, that no Senator is yet ready to vote on what is the best sort of a memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

I think, also, that the chairman of the Committee on the Library [Mr. Wetmore], in the statement that he made a moment ago calling attention to the fact that there have been pending before Congress a good many different propositions for a suitable memorial to the memory of Mr. Lincoln, proved conclusively that we ought not to consider the question here in the morning hour, at a time when Senators can not and ought not to take the necessary time to discuss the relative merits of the different propositions.

Therefore, as I took occasion to state yesterday, I object to attaching to a resolution necessarily sentimental, and one that the entire Senate and Congress is anxious to pass, a proposition that involves at least something of real-estate speculation to a greater or less extent. I think it is unfair to the people whose ideas are different as to an appropriate memorial for us at this time to so far preclude the possibility of any other proposition being presented, so far, even, as the amendment this morning suggests, of appropriating money to begin this particular kind of memorial.

Now, I am very frank to say that I do not know what sort of a memorial we ought to erect to Abraham Lincoln. It has never appealed to me that a road is a very proper thing as a memorial to Mr. Lincoln. It has occurred to me that we could better erect some great public building, peculiarly public and open to the public, containing at all times such things and devoted to such uses as all the people are interested in, and that the great mass of people who are constantly passing through our Capital City would like to visit, where every man when he comes to Washington, and every woman, can see the memorial that Congress has erected to Mr. Lincoln.

It has not occurred to me that the memorial should be a road going from here out to that great battlefield. It is a place to which comparatively few people will travel, and the road will not be greatly used aside from the people who live locally between here and that point. It is not a road even that might be as much used as between here and New York City, as it occurs to me. A very small portion of the people coming to Washington would travel over that road.

Therefore, it seems to me, when we are erecting a memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, we want to get something that will be so big, and perhaps so much in one place, that the American people shall be able to see it when they come. It would be a good deal of an effort and a good deal of expense for the people of this country to see the memorial to Abraham Lincoln if we made it in the form of a road between here and Gettysburg. It would be proper to consider the road proposition, we were discussing this morning as to what was a suitable memorial and the different propositions were before us. laid on our desks this morning a report gotten out by a distinguished man, long in public life, calling attention to the different kinds of such memorials that have been erected in other countries. If all those propositions were before the Senate and could be discussed pro and con and the question of this road brought up for the opinion of the Senate, it would at least be opportune; but to commit ourselves, which this amendment certainly does, here in the morning hour in an ex parte hearing, with only the one proposition before us, it seems to me is unwise. It also seems to me that those who are advocating and are favorable to this proposition ought not to take advantage of the sentiment that surrounds this joint resolution to pass through a proposition which, at the best we can say of it, is doubtful as to whether or not it could receive favorable action if standing alone.

Yesterday morning when I undertook to say a few words in opposition to the precipitate action that was about to be made, I was criticised, perhaps unintentionally, I think, by a Senator for objecting to the consideration of this road to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. As I said then, it was not an objection to the original resolution. No Senator would object to it; but I did object to the Senators who were favoring this particular kind of a memorial taking advantage of just the thing that the Senator called my attention to, the sentiment that surrounds the joint resolution, for the purpose of securing favorable action upon this road plan. My position was that it tended to keep Senators from objecting, from even debating, from opposing a very doubtful proposition by combining it with this very popular resolution.

It appears to me that it is inappropriate for those advocating that proposition, or any particular proposition, to undertake to hitch it onto this joint resolution. We ought to be able to pass this joint resolution to the memory of Lincoln as a tribute to him and his life work, and not have attached to it some proposition for the creating of a great highway that means something to property owners, that means dollars and cents to people in this city, a thing mixed more or less, if we can believe the newspaper reports, with real-estate transactions, mercenary matters. It seems to me we ought to entirely divorce, I say with all candor, this joint resolution that we are passing for the observance and celebration of this great day from any ulterior object, and we ought not to hook it up with anything that looks to a real-estate transaction. Therefore I hope that the Senate will vote down the amendment.

When I made some objection to the amendment yesterday morning I realized, of course, that a Senator in objecting to that kind of amendment might be misunderstood. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who called my attention to the fact that I could not object to amendments being offered, that I made the statement I did in the hope that the friends of this joint resolution (and I am sure the Senators who are offering this proposed amendment are friends of the joint resolution) might see the propriety of withholding such an amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, it became my very pleasant privilege a few years ago to visit Japan with a party of gentlemen headed by the President-elect, Mr. Taft. In our visit there our attention was called to a road leading from Nikko at one time to Tokyo, about 65 miles. It is now in good preservation for about 45 miles, with immense rows of trees on each side.

The building of the road was brought about in this way: Years ago one of the noted Shogans of that country died, and his different subjects wanted to show their appreciation of this noted and good man. They contributed gold and silver, brass, bronze, marble, and stone of different kinds to erect to him a suitable monument as a mark of their respect and love. One of the princes was unable to contribute his portion to the erection of the monument, and he, to show his appreciation, set out a row of small trees along the road for the length of 65 miles. Now, hundreds of years afterwards, it is one of the greatest roads in the country. It is one of the show places of Japan, is this great highway bordered on each side with magnificent trees, so large that three of us catching hands could not reach around the trunk of one of them. No visitor is supposed to have properly seen Japan unless he has traveled over this magnificent road. When monuments of marble, brass, stone, and other materials contributed by the wealthy crumble and disappear, this modest contribution of this poor Japanese prince stands and becomes more beautiful each year.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that a road on something of this same line, leading from here to Gettysburg, where Lincoln delivered perhaps the greatest speech he ever made, would certainly be an appropriate memorial to that great man, and would, as does the memorial of the Japanese prince, grow more beautiful each year. If necessary we can here in the District of Columbia, where the highway would commence, build beautiful arches, such as some of us have seen in other countries, where they have been erected to the memory of their great men.

I certainly approve of the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, yesterday morning I offered an amendment to the joint resolution having for its purpose the clearing of the way for free action in the future with reference to a fitting memorial to President Lincoln. It is not my purpose at length this morning to speak of the highway, which I then suggested, as one of the probable forms of expression appropriate to the purpose in view; but since the matter has been discussed this morning it seems proper enough now to say that. notwithstanding what has been said, I adhere to the belief that this great highway, which would be some 46 miles in length, extending from the front door of the White House to the battlefield of Gettysburg, would be a most fitting memorial.

The Senator from Pennsylvania suggested the enduring fame of the Appian Way as illustrating the enduring quality of this kind of monument. The fact that it would possess utility would insure its perpetual existence. The Appian Way, to which the Senator referred, extends across the Pontine Marshes and through the Albano Mountain, in Italy. For the first few miles along that great highway the tombs of the renowned men of Rome were erected long, long ago, including the tombs of the Scipios. Those tombs have crumbled to decay; they constitute but ruins now, with slight marks on the surface here and there to indicate the sites where they stood. Those tombs were undoubtedly constructed in a substantial manner; and, as the people of the day builded, in an enduring way; but the tombs have crumbled with the earth upon which they were built. road, however, continues to be the wonder and admiration of men. The road, like the river, remains forever, while these monuments, made of marble and granite, will crumble and decay, as the tombs of the great Romans have crumbled and decayed. This highway, extending from the homes of the Presidents to the historic spot, will grow more interesting as the years go by, because, as I suggested yesterday, the forty-odd States of the Union will be permitted to erect suitable monuments along the route. Not a single mile of that road would in twenty-five years from now be without a monument of some kind erected by one or all of the States.

Mr. President, such a memorial can not be regarded as constituting what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] states, a real-estate speculation, any more than can the erection of a granite monument be regarded as a speculation in granite or granite cutting. That cheap and puerile way of disposing of a great subject does not meet with any sympathy from me.

The suggestion of a fitting memorial was made in the resolution as presented to the Senate in the form of a recommendation that a monument be erected in this Capital City. It seemed but proper at the time to suggest that no monument can be erected in this city of granite and of marble which will not compete with the monument of Washington that can at all measure up to the desire of the American people to fittingly commemorate the distinguished services of Abraham Lincoln.

I do not wish to be understood as pressing at this moment the determination of a question which the Senate is not prepared to decide, but it is not inopportune to decide the question now.

I shall vote for the substitute presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] as an amendment in the form of a substitute for that particular section or portion of the joint resolution. If that is not adopted, I shall then insist upon the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNox], I desire to state for myself, in order that my vote may not be misunderstood or misconstrued in any way, that I will very cheerfully vote for the joint resolution as favored by the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Wetmore].

I do not think this is a proper time to determine what shall be the particular memorial or to forestall in any way, by even a partial determination, what may be the ultimate conclusion in regard thereto. I am ready to cooperate with other Senators in the erection of any suitable memorial that Congress may deem to be the proper memorial; but I think at this time it is sufficient to go as far as the resolution goes which is favored by the Senator from Rhode Island.

I thought it was due to myself, Mr. President, in view of the fact that I shall vote in the negative, that I should state this much.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, there is much that is captivating in the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox], backed up by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carer], regarding the construction of a great highway between Washington and Gettysburg, particularly if that will include, as I have no doubt it will, great monumental structures at each end and monumental structures along the line. The Appian Way has certainly been a most enduring work, and the road in Japan, to which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scott] referred, is one of the most attractive things of the kind that I have ever seen, and very fitly memorializes a great event.

It seems to me, however, that we ought not to consider questions of this kind in connection with this resolution. Various propositions are now pending before Congress relating to the form which the Lincoln memorial shall take. There is a suggestion of the park commission regarding the utilization of a part of the Mall for that purpose, and they have presented the outline of a most noble and attractive design. There is a suggestion regarding the erection of a Lincoln memorial between the Capital and the great railway station that has been recently constructed; and there are other suggestions.

I imagine that Congress, under the inspiration of this moment—the centennial of Mr. Lincoln's birth—will proceed actively upon this subject; will appoint a commission of eminent men, of eminent artists, of eminent sculptors, who will make a study of all the various projects and present them to Congress for its consideration. It seems to me that that will be the appropriate time for the consideration of the exact form which this memorial shall take.

It is true that the Senator from Pennsylvania insists that his amendment does not commit Congress to this great highway as a memorial; but it seems to me that it does, for it declares that this memorial shall include this great highway and makes an appropriation of $50,000 for its survey. It seems to me that the whole movement, by reason of the action which the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes, will have such headway as to make it irresistible in the legislation of the future. I am strongly of the opinion that we ought to in-trust this great matter, this matter of the highest importance, to the judgment of a commission of distinguished men acting in cooperation with the great artists of the country, and that Congress will not be prepared to act until their plans are formulated and presented.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, as to the proposition that we shall appropriately celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, there seems to be no difference of opinion; but a half hour's debate discloses the fact that there are many views as to the most suitable manner of fixing upon some material memorial in honor of Lincoln. Ample time remains for the discussion of such a memorial; only twenty days remain for the passage of this resolution in the Senate and in the House of Representatives for the issuance of a proclamation by the President, by the governors of the States, and for those arrangements which the people must make in order that appropriate and fitting ceremonies may be held on the 12th day of February.

I do not know whether I would support a roadway proposition or a great memorial building or a monument. I am unprepared as to my action in that matter, and this discussion indicates other Senators are equally uncertain; but as to the other question, which is the real purpose of the resolution, there is universal agreement; and I again urge and repeat that no amendment should be forced into this resolution which will retard its passage here or in the other House, or which will in any way delay the action we must speedily take if the ceremonies which we propose and invite are to be adequate and appropriate on the hundredth anniversary of Lincoln's birth and truly expressive of the high estimate of him and his work by the American people.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick] that there are differing views about the memorial to Lincoln is one of the very reasons why I am anxious to have decisive action taken in connection with this joint resolution, which we are sure to pass, and to pass promptly. I do not desire to refuse debate on any of its provisions, but it seems to me now is the time to take some distinct step toward a memorial; to make it clear that we are to have a memorial, and not waste years and years, as we probably should, in deciding what the memorial shall be and making preparations to carry it out. It took something like, I think, a hundred years to complete the Washington Monument. That monument stood there for fifty or sixty years an unfinished shaft, unsightly, discreditable; and it is only very recently that that great monument was finished, nearly—not quite, but nearly—one hundred years after Washington's death.

It seems to me that we are to-day as able as we shall be any other day to decide that among the memorials to Lincoln—I am far from limiting it to a highway—that among the memorials to Lincoln this great highway from the capital city, where his great work was done and where his life was offered up, to the field of Gettysburg, one of the great battlefields of the war, where he delivered his famous speech—one of the noblest utterances that the language can show—it seems to me that we ought now to make provision to include that road among the memorials to Lincoln.

I do not know to what mercenary considerations the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] may have referred. To my mind it is simply a question of taking a substantive step, so that we may be assured that Congress is committed, not only to the building of a road, but to the erection of a suitable monument to the great President here in the city, or also at points on the road or on the Gettysburg battlefield; and I should be very sorry if we should allow this opportunity to pass with a mere general expression in favor of a memorial to Lincoln and the creation of a special holiday.

It is not necessary for me to enlarge on the value and stability of a great highway as a monument, because the Roman roads, not only the Appian Way, which has been referred to, but the Roman roads which stretch all over Europe and which can still be seen in the Alpine passes, are amongst the most enduring monuments to the power and greatness of the Empire of Rome that were ever devised.

The idea of the "Lincoln Way" seems to be a very fine and a very beautiful one; and I am very anxious to have something done now so that we shall not allow our zeal to escape in words. I should like to see the work on the memorial begun, and I do not think there could be a more appropriate time to begin the work and to commit Congress to the policy of Lincoln memorials—not only the road, but a proper monument to Lincoln—than this very year, which is the centennial of his birth.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to suggest a necessary amendment to this joint resolution in whatever form it has been presented. There should be inserted in line 14, on page 2, after the word "action," the words "by Congress." That is made peculiarly necessary by some things which have transpired within the last few days.

This is a joint resolution, but it will have the same effect as legislation by bill. It has been suggested that this does not bind any person. I have before me here the report of the proceedings of a meeting, which was published in the papers yesterday in connection with the appointment of the Commission on Arts, and so forth, which indicates an interpretation of just this class of legislation by the executive department that would make it dangerous, in my judgment, to enact this joint resolu-tion in the language in which it appears. It says:

Be it further resolved, That we-

That is, Congressrecommend action-

Recommend action by whom?

Mr. LODGE. Is the Senator reading from the original joint resolution?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and the language in the amendment which I have before me does not change that. That language becomes of special importance in connection with the interpretation of the executive power of the Government as given to us or suggested to us—with what responsibility I am unable to sayby the newspapers of this city yesterday. It is suggested—it is more than suggested, it is asserted—that if Congress recommends action, the executive department of the Government is already clothed with the power to act on the recommendation; they have not the money to spend for the construction of the highway until we appropriate it, but they have some kind of a way of doing things that compels us to appropriate money in order to save the face of the Government.

It is not my purpose to indulge in any severe criticism, or any criticism at all, of anyone; but when a condition confronts us such as that presented by the appointment, said to be official, of a great committee that is to take the place of Congress in fixing the location or the character of public buildings, we would lose sight of our duty were we not to take it into consideration in framing the language of a resolution such as this.

I was not willing to credit or act upon my first impression when I read the language of this resolution and remembered the statement contained in the newspaper as to the interpretation placed upon it, but it kept coming back to me that there was a connection between the two things; that if we, in the language of this resolution, recommend action, it will be inter-preted to mean action by the executive department of the Government, unless we limit it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield

Mr. KNOX. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that under the amendment I proposed there is no direction at all that action shall be taken.

Mr. HEYBURN. I noted that. It is a limitation,

Mr. KNOX. I carefully avoided the word "direction."

Mr. HEYBURN. I took notice of that. The amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania is to some extent a limitation upon this great committee, whose names I have before me, and the prophecy of their work contained in the newspaper statement. But I would call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the language of his amendment, providing that-

This memorial shall be in the nature of a great national highway from the city of Washington to Gettysburg, Pa.

Suppose that under this new doctrine-and I have no hesitation in stating it to be a new doctrine—the Executive can, upon his own motion, take his own method of making effective the recommendation of Congress, he might, without waiting for further legislation, enter upon this great work to the extent of making plans.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I very carefully sought to avoid the objection the Senator from Idaho is now urging to the language of the resolution in its original form, because I had the benefit yesterday afternoon of privately hearing his views upon that subject. It is not possible, I think, to read the amendment that I propose and get anything out of it more than this: With this viewgress having in contemplation the advisability and desirability of constructing a suitable memorial to Mr. Lincoln which should contain as a part of its plan a highway, to be called the "Lincoln way "-the sum of $50,000 is appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War-for what? For the mere purpose of making a survey.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I interrupt the Senator a moment? Mr. KNOX. Just permit me to close what I was saying. It will take me only a moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. It is obvious that, if the ultimate judgment of Congress is that this work is to be consummated, this peculiar form of memorial would require a very great deal of preliminary work in the way of a survey, and it is only for that purpose that the appropriation is sought to be made.

Mr. HEYBURN. Before the Senator takes his seat, Mr. President, I wish to say that I do not find in the Congressional RECORD the amendment to which the Senator has just referred, but I do find the other amendment of the Senator stated at the

Mr. KNOX. I withdrew that and offered this new amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, it should have been also in the RECORD.

Mr. KNOX. It was only offered this morning.
Mr. HEYBURN. Then, Mr. President, I will only say that while I approve of the proposition suggested by the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, still the necessity for the amendment I have suggested to the resolution is not obviated, because I insist that the recommendation here should be to Congress in terms which would limit it so that it could not be construed as a recommendation to the Executive.

Mr. KNOX. This amendment of mine does not contain the "recommendation" at all. It simply appropriates the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of making a survey.

Is it intended as a substitute for the last Mr. HEYBURN. paragraph of the joint resolution?

Yes, sir; a complete and entire substitute.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought the Senator intended yesterday to cover the same ground, and I was surprised not to find it in the Record. It may have been our personal conversation that I confused with the Senator's remarks on the floor.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator will permit me, I will put him exactly right. This morning I offered an amendment to the joint resolution as it was reported to the Senate from the committee, which amendment consisted in striking out from the original resolution all beginning on line 14 down to the end and substituting in its place what I handed the Senator. So the Senator will see that all that part of the joint resolution has gone out.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then that overcomes my objection to the Senator's amendment, and I shall cheerfully support it; but unless that limitation is in the resolution when it finally is adopted, it will be readily seen that our recommendation would be to the executive department, and not to Congress. I think that is important.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Idaho objects to the form of this resolution as reported by the committee, and also to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, upon the ground——

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I withdrew my objection to the form of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania since my attention has been directed to it as formulated.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well. Then I understand that the Senator objects to the language of the resolution upon the ground that the recommendation as to the action may be regarded by the President as an authority to him to take action, with the aid of the council of arts, which he recently appointed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; that I clearly stated.
Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, let me suggest to the Senator from Idaho that that can be easily met by inserting after the words "action be taken" the words "by the proper committee of Congress," for that is doubtless the intention of this joint resolution. This is a mere joint resolution expressing the sense of Congress that legislative action should be taken.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not be inclined to differ with the Senator from Nevada in regard to that, because it would accomplish just the purpose I had in view in objecting to the existing language. But the motion will first recur on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvana, and that question may not arise if we adopt the amendment. If we do not, then it will

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say one word further regarding the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho, to wit, that the President of the United States would regard this as an authorization to take action. My understanding of the order made by the President of the United States is that the council of arts, which he recently created, is simply advisory to the various departments of the Government in matters relating to art. I do not apprehend for a moment that the President of the United States would take upon himself to act in contravention of an act of Congress, and wherever an act of Congress did give to a particular bureau or a particular board or a particular commission power to make and perfect plans, I imagine that this council of arts would have no function.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like at that point to interrupt the Senator, although he is speaking in my time. I should not like to have it understood that I thought that the President was likely to disregard the expressed will of Congress at any time. I think my language would not justify such a construction. I was referring to this particular joint resolution, and I was speaking of the published statement as to the views of the executive department of the Government in regard to how it might be carried into effect. Of course I would not for a moment suggest that the President or any other executive officer would disregard the express wish of Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I did not misunderstand the Senator from Idaho, nor do I wish to enter into a discussion about the council of arts that is now engaging so much attention in the newspapers. I simply wish to say one word, without any personal knowledge of the President's views. I assume that this council of arts is simply an advisory one to the executive departments. The President is charged with the execution of the laws, and it is within his province to call in the aid of experts in architecture, sculpture, and painting to advise regarding the execution of important matters involving these arts.

There seems to be very general misconstruction of his action upon this subject. I imagine that wherever the Congress itself prescribes that the duty shall be performed by some board or commission, that method of action will be taken.

I wish to say that I am in absolute harmony with the view of the American Institute of Architects upon this subject, an institution that embraces almost all the distinguished artists in the country; not simply architects, but sculptors and painters. I am entirely in sympathy with their view that great public works which relate in any degree to art should be subject to the careful inspection and criticism and suggestions of this great body of experts. I am very sorry that any contrary impression may have been produced in the country regarding the action of the President, for I fear that it may affect the action of Congress itself upon this most important question. It is very desirable that Congress should act, and should act in the near future, and I assume that the President's action is simply an outline or suggestion, within the limits of his executive powers, of what he thinks ought to be the action of Congress in a broader and more enduring form.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was proceeding to say that I did not intend to express an opinion upon the question of the President's action in appointing this committee, because Congress at all times has it within its power to specify the manner in which its purposes shall be carried out, and I do not know whether or not the President should have appointed this commission. I am willing to accept his wisdom as an answer. It will be time enough for Congress to question it when the question of appropriating money to compensate them comes before it. The President is entitled to call into his councils any or all of the citizens of the country who are willing to come upon his invitation to advise with him upon any question. He is the executive officer of the Government. He had no power, until Congress gave it to him, except as it was expressed in the Constitution of the United States. He is the designated officer to execute the will of the people as it is enacted by Congress. That is all.

I do not want to be subject to being quoted as having made an attack upon the President for calling to his assistance in council a number of gentlemen whom he deems qualified to advise him. But I mentioned it merely because it was a part of and coupled with the expressions purporting to have come from the President himself as to when his power commenced under circumstances such as will arise out of the passage of this joint resolution; and inasmuch as the amendment before the Senate excludes the necessity of further consideration of the limitations I propose, I will wait until that is passed upon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, so far as my own vote is concerned, the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] presents a conjunction both of duty and the hour. Within a few days will occur the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of one of the most exalted patriots and wisest statesmen of all time, and altogether the greatest humanist that ever lived, except the divine figure whose life and teachings the character of Abraham Lincoln so well illustrated.

Within a few days one hundred years shall have passed away since that man who, save one, the American people are proudest of, was born. It appears to be the very article of fate that a proposition should now be made to act definitely for some memorial which shall be as enduring as his fame.

The amendment of the committee does nothing. It is as vague as words can make it. It merely declares our intention some time or other to do something or other; but the time is not designated, the purpose is not stated, the object itself is not described. It might as well have said: "Let us postpone this large design to a more convenient season"—a season that never will arrive. What more appropriate season than the present hour? The proposition that it shall be referred to a commission of eminent gentlemen throws no light upon the situation.

This country and the world have been erecting memorials to their great and their loved ones from the beginning of time. All the devices are exhausted. We have the Grant memorial in New York. We have, to the Father of his Country, that noble shaft rising by the Potomac's waters. No possible monument we could erect to Lincoln would be anything more than a duplication in some form of what already has been done many times in this Republic for other patriots and statesmen. The whole field has been canvassed and exhausted. But the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes a memorial unique, peculiarly American, and as everlasting as the continent itself.

So, Mr. President, it appears to me that if we are to act, now is the time designated by events themselves. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania appears to me to be the decree written by the wisdom of history and dates. I can conceive of nothing nobler for a perpetual memorial to Abraham Lincoln than to build this highway from the city where his greatest hours were lived to the spot where his noblest words were spoken—an utterance, Mr. President, which stands alone in the history of human speech as the tenderest and loftiest expression of merely human wisdom and heart; for the speech of Lincoln at Gettysburg, concluding the most meaningful epoch of this country's history, is with one exception only the loftiest utterance that ever fell from purely human lips. Here in this city his life and services culminated. At Gettysburg, because of the mighty struggle there, his eloquence, his wisdom, and his prophetic foresight had in those immortal words that there fell from his lips their ripest fruit.

If we are going to do anything, now is the time. If we are going to do anything that shall be anything more than a duplication of what has been done all over this country for other men, this is the largest and the noblest project. So far as my vote is concerned, I shall cast it not only gladly, but with a sense of duty, for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I know it has been said-

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator takes the position that there should be some action. I have prepared a proposed amendment, or a substitute, providing that the Committee on the Library be directed at the next regular session of Congress to report some appropriate legislation for a suitable memorial, or memorials, following out the words of the joint resolution. In short, leaving the matter open to the committee for further consideration. Different forms of memorials may come up. This, as I understand, commits us to this one single proposition, without any consideration of any other proposition. I will ask the Senator if, in his judgment, the amendment I have suggested would not be better?

I am in favor of the proposition the Senator suggests, that action should be taken. I think we all want a memorial. I do not think there is any doubt about that. But I think it is unwise to commit ourselves to any particular proposition without any consideration of the others and precluding all others.

out any consideration of the others and precluding all others.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The suggestion of the Senator from Nabraska is fraught with a kind of cautious wisdem, which I freely admit; but for myself, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, for the precise reason pointed out by the Senator from Nebraska why we should not adopt it, to wit, that it does commit us to something definite. It commits us to something splendid and to something that has no example from ocean to ocean.

I was about to say, when the Senator made his fruitful suggestion, the wisdom of which I admit—

Mr. BURKETT. May I ask the Senator another question? This commits us to one particular proposition. We do not know how much it will cost.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Personally, I want to be committed, so far as my vote is concerned. I am merely explaining my vote.

Mr. BURKETT. We are committing ourselves to a proposition that has not been investigated. We do not know how much it will cost. We do not know what is the engineering proposition involved. We do not know the practicability of it in a good many ways. We do not know in advance of undertaking to get titles what advantages may be taken by private parties. In short, the preliminaries have not been attended to before we commit ourselves to the proposition. Does not the Senator think it would be a little better-

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to answer that, if the Senator from Montana does not mind.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to make a suggestion, based upon the wording of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. It will be observed by examining the amendment that it does not contemplate embracing the entire Lincoln memorial or monument in a road, but it does provide that this memorial shall include a national highway, to be called the "Lincoln highway," from this city to the Gettysburg battlefield. I think it would be well to consider that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No. For my own vote I admit the technical parliamentary wisdom of what the Senator from Nebraska has said; but, on a question like this, the Senator's point does not influence my mind. I do not think this is a question for the splitting of hairs about dollars. I regard the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania not as the Senator himself does. I regard it as a committal. It is a time to act.

Further answering the Senator from Nebraska, I concede that we do not know how much it will cost. But this is a matter of sentiment, and while we live in a day in which sentiment is undervalued, yet, on second thought, we all know it was sentiment-something that you could not measure by the yardstick, that you could not weigh, see, feel, touch, hear, or discern by any of the physical senses—that brought Lincoln to the exalted position he occupied and sent a million men singing and happy to battle and to death.

As I understand the American people-and I think I fairly well understand them—sentiment, which is the thing that after all makes our individual lives worth living, which is the only thing for which men are willing to die, for which the Nation is willing to go to war, is not a thing with respect to which the American people are going to count the cost.

So in this movement, which is to enshrine not only the memory of Lincoln so much as the feeling of the American people upon a great and eternal national question as well as the character of the American people he best typified, the question of dollars can not be intruded.

Also I have thought myself of what the Senator from Nebraska prudently called attention to. Real estate dealers might take possible advantage of any proposed legislation. course that has occurred to every intelligent man. But, Mr. President, "it must needs be that offenses come." It is possible there shall be a man base enough to speculate and prostitute this great enterprise, so far as he is concerned, to low commercial purposes. But we, legislating for the American Republic, can not let that halt us, if the other be our duty. It has been suggested to me in private conversation what I think is in the minds of many Senators who are opposing this joint resolution, that we are building into another State, at the national expense, a great and historic highway, which shall be forever thronged by travelers from all over the Republic. That is quite But this subject is so high that you can not, when you stand upon it, see state lines. This is a national project. If you erect a memorial in any place but in the District of Columbia it would have to be erected in a State. So, with all deference for the gentlemen who hold these views, I think this proposition is so majestic that the objections of the advantage of a State or the possible speculations of real estate dealers, can not be discerned upon its mighty surface.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I shall vote for this I would have been glad to think that it was an inspiration of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Things like this instantly struck from the brain of a man who is in earnest constitute greatness. But that is not true. An even greater thing is true of the Senator's proposition. He is here volcing in this resolution the thought which has been growing in the minds of the people for decades. And to sense and utter a people's purpose is, as Emerson declares, the highest test of statesmanship. And now, let us hope, as the hundredth anniversary of Lincoln approaches, the people's purpose will find in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania its fruition.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I hope that the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNox] will be adopted. I believe in the construction of this great memorial from Washington to Gettysburg. Here in Washington this remarkable man, whose services it is to commemorate, dedicated his life to his country. At Gettysburg he delivered that imperishable address, which will speak to the undying ages when the orations of antiquity and the contributions to the classic oratory of Great Britain are forgotten. The few words he spoke at Gettysburg are still ringing through the land, and they will reecho at the fireside of future generations so long as the Republic lasts. This oration may have been crude and unadorned, but it will outlive the orations of Pitt and of Burke and of Erskine, and every pilgrim and traveler upon this road will be thrilled with a memory of that immortal production.

I did not accept his political views when living. I honor him dead. He occupies an isolated spot high up in the temple of his country's glory. He was never properly appreciated when he was living. Now his resurrected spirit hovers over the institutions of this country as an inspiration to every patriot who can emulate him.

Therefore, Mr. President, if we want in a practical way, in a way that will survive when monuments shall crumble to the earth, to stamp the memory of this great character upon the very face of this Republic so that it never shall be forgotten, as it never ought to be, in my judgment, this is the manner and the method of its execution.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, there can be no difference of opinion in the Senate, I think, as to the desirability of erecting a memorial or memorials to Mr. Lincoln suitable to the character of the man, which I think is the grandest in American history, and worthy of this great Nation. But what form the memorial or memorials shall take is a question which should be entered upon with deliberation.

I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he modify his amendment so as to include memorials and an inquiry into suitable memorials, and to modify it by striking out the word "shall" and inserting the word "may," so that the whole question of suitable memorials shall be before Congress, and that the appropriation of $50,000 shall be made for the survey of the highway, which may become, in the judgment of Congress, a part of the memorials to be constructed in honor of President Lincoln. I think, if the Senator will accept the amendments, there can be no objection to the adoption of the joint resolution.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, to the substitution of the plural for the singular in the amendment, making it "memorials" instead of "memorial," I see no objection, because it is contemplated that the memorial may take a different form. If I thought there was any danger of the resolution not passing with the word "shall" in it, I should, of course, be very glad to have the word "may" inserted; and voting as I intend to vote, with the idea that it is time for Congress to make an expression as to some form, and believing that it will meet the approval of the American people to have an expression now, I am willing to accept the suggestion made by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania modifies his amendment, as will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out "memorial" and insert "memorials."

Mr. GALLINGER. So as to read-

The SECRETARY. So as to read:

That with a view to the construction of sultable memorials to commemorate the public services and character of Abraham Lincoln, which memorials shall include a great national highway, to be called "The Lincoln Way"—

Mr. GALLINGER. "May."

Mr. BURKETT. May we have the amendment read as it will read if amended, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read as it will read if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as Ioliows:

Be it further resolved, That with a view to the construction of suitable memorials to commemorate the public services and character of Abraham Lincoln, which memorials may include a great national highway, to be called "The Lincoln Way," from Washington to the battle-field of Gettysburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses in making a survey for said highway.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I was hoping that the Senator from Pennsylvania would not accept the amendment. As an ardent supporter of his amendment, I sincerely hope he will not agree to change "shall" to "may."

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I was going to say to the Senator from Indiana that I do not feel I ought to take the responsibility of accepting the amendment, under the peculiar circumstances which surround the joint resolution, and particularly having reference to the time when the joint resolution is presented to us. I therefore will withdraw my consent to have the word "may" substituted for the word "shall," leaving it to the Senate to determine.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I move that the word "shall" be stricken out and the word "may" inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated. The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania strike out the word "shall" and insert the word

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no information before the Senate as to how much this road will cost and there has been no consideration of it, so far as I know, by any committee of the Senate. To my knowledge there has been no consideration of it. It seems to me that Congress ought not to be irrevocably bound to a proposition of this kind without some consideration or some

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I desire to perfect further the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania by adding what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania shall do-nate to the Government of the United States the right of way for said "Lincoln Way" within their respective States.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I do not object to that at all, but it comes in in a very crude way. I think the resolution now reads "may." The resolution does not direct the Government, and it might not do it at all. It says the Government may do it. I do not think the amendment to the amendment, therefore, has a proper place in the resolution.

Mr. BURKETT. I have not any objections as to the place where it goes in. In fact, I did not suggest that it should go in at the end. If the Senator can suggest a better place, very well.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that the cost of this road, I think, has been vastly exaggerated. We know the distance from here to Gettysburg, and it is not such an enormous sum of money that I think we need to couple with the resolution a provision of this sort. I shall not object to it, but I think it is entirely out of place.

Mr. KNOX. I do object to it, Mr. President. I object to putting the Senate of the United States in the position of saying that we are willing to build a memorial to Abraham Lincoln if the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania shall pay for it.

Mr. RAYNER. The people bordering on the road, I assure the Senator, will be very glad to give the land.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that until we take some substantive action in the way of the making of an appropriation and ordering this highway, it is not worth while to limit this action by any proviso of that description. It will come in appropriately later on. For the survey of a road 46 miles it looks to me like a pretty exorbitant price; and while we are not counting money here, I suggest that we might appropriate a part of this sum to plans and specifications for monuments and other things in the way of the beautification of the highway after it has been built.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator probably has not examined the terms of the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has been amended so often here it is a little confusing, unless I had the words before me. It proposes to appropriate $50,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. "Or so much thereof as may be necessary."
Mr. TILLMAN. That phraseology is always used in making appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I differ with the senior Senator from Maryland. As the junior Senator, I do object that the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania shall donate a right of way. It either has to be done by individuals or by the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania. To ask the individuals to donate this property may be a very serious inconvenience and a great loss to them. On the other hand, you can do nothing until you get an appropriation from the State of Pennsylvania and the State of Maryland. As the Senator from Pennsylvania said, this is a matter for the General Government, and I think the General Government ought to stand the expense, and there will be no objection to it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do. Mr. CARTER. I think I may with fair certainty suggest the prediction that the inclination of every farmer between here and Gettysburg will be to have that road go through his farm. It would certainly add materially to the value of the holdings on either side to have this very desirable highway constructed, and donations would follow freely.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That may be true, and it may be that it would not cost anything. It is more than likely that it would not cost anything. At the same time, if this is a memorial to be erected by the United States Government, I think the United States Government ought to make the arrangements in that particular

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkerr] to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNox].

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the question?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. Add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania shall donate to the Government of the United States the right of way for said Lincoln Way within their respective States.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, there being on a division-ayes 6, noes 42.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox].

Mr. KNOX. On that I ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question on a point of order. If the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania shall be adopted will the amendment itself then be amendable after its adoption?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will not be. The amendment must be perfected before it is voted upon.

Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to ask some Senator (I suppose the Senator from Pennsylvania is as familiar with it as anybody else) what is the exact distance from the city of Washington to Gettysburg?

Mr. KNOX. I have traveled over the road between here and Gettysburg frequently, and the route I have taken is about 72 miles; but I understand that the direct route is somewhat shorter. It is about 46 miles, the Representative from that district tells me.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, it seems to me that an appropriation of $50,000 to survey a route of 46 miles is rather extravagant. I know the amendment proposes to appropriate $50,000 or so much thereof as is necessary. It is not going to be necessary to appropriate $50,000. It is not going to be necessary to use that much of the money to survey the route from here to Gettysburg. It does not seem to me reasonable that we should appropriate $50,000 or any more than it is probable will be used in making the survey. The sum proposed is more than $1,000 a mile for the survey alone.

Mr. President-Mr. KNOX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.
Mr. KNOX. In preparing the amendment I inserted the words "fifty thousand dollars" because I had absolutely no knowledge and no experience as to the cost of surveying the route. If any Senator will make a statement that he believes the survey ought to be made for a definite sum below that, I will be perfectly willing to have it substituted instead of the words "fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. KEAN and Mr. SCOTT (to Mr. McLaurin). Make it

$25,000.

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not think it ought to be made $25,000, nor half that sum. I do not think that it ought to cost more than $100 a mile to survey the route. That would be $4,600. I think $5,000 would be an abundance.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield further to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McLAURIN. I do.

Mr. KNOX. It is not contemplated that this shall be an ordinary highway. The scope and the scale upon which it should be constructed would make the engineering problems, I should imagine, rather more difficult than ordinarily.

Of course the appropriation is amply protected by the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary." I think under the circumstances it ought to stand practically where it is unless somebody who pretends to know will indicate what would be a more proper sum.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. McLAURIN. I do.

Mr. DIXON. In connection with a survey of this kind I remember a case in the Yellowstone National Park, where $1,000 was appropriated to survey a mountain road about 30 miles long. It took about $800 of the thousand to make the survey. I do not know how much of a road they surveyed, but I know that that was the cost.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McLAURIN. I do; for a question.
Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that the word "survey" may be more comprehensive as used here than ordinarily. A survey of this line should bring to us the information of what was found on the line. It is not merely a question of running a line to determine a distance, but the return should show every form of location of every house and building and, where it passed through villages and towns, the area of the streets and the buildings necessary to be taken. Without being personal, I will say I have had some experience in having such lines run, and it is not merely the question of running a line. The maps that accompany the report of the engineers should give us all the information that we will need as to what will be included within the plan. I would not think $50,000 too much at all for the pur-

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, who is to judge as to "so much as is necessary?" If that is the direction, then there is no necessity for limiting the maximum amount; we might just as well say that there is a sum appropriated sufficient to make the survey. Congress ought always in making an appropriation to judge itself of the amount that is probably necessary for the work to be done. Mr. du PONT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. McLAURIN. I do. Mr. du PONT. I think that the joint resolution prescribes in terms that the survey proposed shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War. He will be the judge of how much is required for such a survey.

Mr. McLAURIN. That being so, Mr. President, it is itself an objection. Congress, as I have just said, ought to be the judge of that matter. In the instance suggested by the Senator from Montana, a survey of 30 miles was made at an expense of $800, a little less than $30 a mile. Now, here is proposed an appropriation of more than a thousand dollars a mile to make this survey. I have said that I believe a hundred dollars a mile would be sufficient, but certainly $200 a mile would be sufficient for the survey

Mr. President, there is a proposition here for erecting some suitable memorial to one of the great men of this country to commemorate his life and his services to the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purpose

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. McLAURIN. Here is a proposition to build a road from here to the battle ground of Gettysburg, Pa. That road will be worth a great deal to a great many people along the route. It will be worth a great deal to the people of Gettysburg. It will be worth a great deal to some property owners in this city.

I do not believe that a testimonial to one of the great men of the country should be made the occasion for commercial adventure, but at the outset, is Congress going into the extravagance of appropriating $50,000 for the purpose of surveying a road that ought to be surveyed for much less than half and for less than one-fourth of that sum? Is that the spirit in which the enterprise is to be started? I do not think it ought to be. It is true this may be denominated niggardly. Let it be denominated what you please. We are voting away the money of the people of the country and not our own money, and that money ought to be protected by the Congress of the United States, instead of being extravagantly squandered for any purpose.

I am not making the point that Congress should not erect a suitable memorial, but I think it ought to be something in which there is no semblance of an effort at commercialism or an effort at making merchandise of this matter of sentiment. That is my idea about it.

I shall move to strike out "fifty thousand," and I am going to put four times as much in the amount I shall suggest that I think ought to be put in. I am doing that in deference to the suggestion which was made to me a while ago by the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. I shall ask to insert in its place $20,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out "fifty thousand" and insert "twenty thousand," so that if amended it will read:

"The sum of $20,000."
Mr. HALE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] what he has in contemplation about the survey. If it is to be done by engineer officers employed by the Government, it will cost in the way of appropriation very much less than otherwise. But unless that is in contemplation by the Senator, and is so fixed in his amendment, and if the survey is to be made outside of the engineer officers of the department by civil engineers employed by the Government, I am safe in predicting that instead of its costing $50,000 it will cost $150,000. It is a distance of anywhere from 60 to 70 miles-

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.
Mr. KNOX. I may as well relieve the Senator's mind on the subject now as at any other time. It may save some trouble. Of course, there is no contemplation that this work shall be done by anybody except the officials connected with the War Department. It is directed to be done under the Secretary of War, and only such an appropriation should be made as will clearly enable him to do the work that is contemplated. The Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] has just informed me that he proposes to offer an amendment. Will the Senator please state it?

Mr. CARTER. It is to insert, after the word "survey," the words "plans for construction and estimates of cost," so as to read:

Hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses in making a survey, plans for construction, and estimate of cost for said highway.

Mr. HALE. Why not, after the word "survey" insert "by army engineers?"

Mr. KNOX. I am perfectly willing to accept that.

Mr. CARTER. After the word "cost?"

Mr. HALE. That would make all the difference about the expense. You can not get a survey by a civil engineer outside of government employment. First, they have to select the place to locate the road. They have got to spend months in deciding where it shall be made. Then we will get some idea of the cost. Now, let the amendment that I have suggested be read.

Mr. CARTER. The amendment as suggested by the Senator should cause the text to read:

Hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses in making a survey, plans for construction, and estimates of cost by engineers of the United States Army for said highway.

Mr. HALE. That is right. Mr. KNOX. I accept it.

Mr. CARTER. In order that the debate may proceed with this amendment included, if it is the pleasure of the Senate to include it, I now offer the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. In the last line of the proposed amendment, after the word "survey," insert "plans for construction, and estimates of cost by engineers of the United States Army

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania accepts the amendment to his amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the amendment as now proposed may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the joint resolution strike out all of line 14 and the lines that follow and insert:

Be it further resolved, That with a view to the construction of suitable memorials to commemorate the public services and character of Abraham Lincoln, which memorial may include a great national highway to be called "The Lincoln Way," from Washington to the battlefield of Gettysburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses in making a survey, plaus for construction, and estimates of cost by engineers of the United States Army for said highway.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is first on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty" before "thousand."

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Not having been able to hear all of the discussion, I should like to know from the Senator if he considers this resolution as binding upon Congress or the Senate to adopt as a memorial the construction of this road.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, as I have already stated, I will say in terser form, the resolution does not bind Congress to the highway

Mr. CULBERSON. Do I understand, then, the Senator by his amendment simply to mean that this is merely an inquiry on the part of Congress to determine the cost, and so forth, connected with a project of this kind, to be hereafter determined by Congress upon a full consideration of the matter?

Mr. KNOX. I do not think that any doubt will arise in the mind of anyone who reads or listens to the amendment now in its present form. If it is any satisfaction to the Senator from Texas to state my own personal views about it, I regard it that the Senate is practically saying to-day that the time has come when there should be some declaration upon the subject of a suitable memorial to Lincoln, and that is as far as the Senate is concerned. It feels that the subject of a great national high-way commends itself to the Senate to be inquired into, and therefore we must know something about the location and the cost, the general features of it, and a sum of money that is being appropriated to gather that information. Of course when it comes to the Senate, the Senate may go on with it or it may reject it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.
Mr. HALE. I thought the Senator would be willing to assure us that neither he nor any successor of his nor any Senator from Pennsylvania will hereafter claim that by this joint resolution Congress was committed to this highway.

Mr. KNOX. I do not see how I can add anything to the words I have already said, and I do not care to bind myself or my successors in office.

Mr. HALE. I hoped the Senator might be able to go a little further than that, because I fancy that hereafter we shall be told that we have got to build this highway.

Mr. KNOX. If it can be arranged so that I can decide who my successor would be, I think I could better inform the Senator. Mr. HALE. I think we all would be entirely willing the Senator should do that,

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. If I understand him correctly, the Senator would recognize, if at any subsequent time it should be the sense of Congress, that it would be equally proper for the Senate to make an inquiry as to any other particular route that might be desired to be inquired into.

Mr. KNOX. I certainly think there would be no limitation on the power of Congress to make such an inquiry as has been suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. And that the inquiry would be as much in order, within proper limitations, of course, as this one, if any suggestions in the future should be made.

Mr. KNOX. That matter is entirely within the discretion of Congress

Mr. WETMORE. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I ask him whether his amendment as it now stands contemplates any other memorial besides a road?

Mr. KNOX. Oh, yes; I am quite sure of it.

Mr. WETMORE. In other words, it does not commit us to the Gettysburg road?

Mr. KNOX. Absolutely it does not, as I understand it. Mr. BACON. I want to say that my inquiry was suggested by the thought that a road from here to Richmond would be very much more appropriate road than a road from here to Gettysburg. Whereas the road to Gettysburg would lead to one battlefield, the road to Richmond would lead through the battlefields of four years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the sum which is appropriated would apply only to plans and estimates regarding the road to Gettysburg or whether it would cover also plans and estimates for other suggested memorials?

Mr. KNOX. I think it is perfectly clear from the language of the joint resolution that the appropriation is made exclusively for the purpose of inquiring into the highway project and not any other project.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me suggest, then, to the Senator from Pennsylvania that if we act now in this way and make an appropriation of $50,000 or a less sum simply for a survey of this road and for plans and estimates of the cost, we practically give this form of memorial the right of way. It is not fair when we are considering the question as to what shall be the form of memorial to confine our appropriation and our investigation to only one form of memorial.

The joint resolution as now amended provides for the consideration of memorials hereafter—one, two, three, four alternative projects-and yet we present the machinery by which only one memorial can be presented to the consideration of Congress.

I do not believe that that is the intention, and I would suggest that the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania be enlarged so as to make the expenditure of $50,000 apply to the study generally of this question, so that alternative projects can be considered when the matter comes before Congress.

I would also suggest to the Senator that his amendment would be improved by the addition of a provision, as follows:

That in connection with such memorials the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, an advisory council, to be known as "the council of the arts," composed of eminent architects, painters, sculptors, landscape architects, and laymen, such body to be selected from names submitted to the President by the directors of the American Institute of Architects.

Mr. President, we are just entering upon a great era of architectural development in this country, and thus far we have made no such provision for it as has been made in other civilized countries by the creation of a bureau of arts, or by the creation of a ministry of arts, and by the creation in every instance of a council of arts, composed of architects, painters, and sculptors of distinction. This work will involve the expenditure of many millions of dollars, and yet in it, so far as this amendment goes, the talents only of the Engineering Department of the Government are enlisted, and that, too, in face of the fact that the Engineer Corps of the Army is composed of only 180-odd officers, that it is overburdened with work, and that recom-mendations are now pending for doubling the force, which, of course, will take many years to accomplish through the slow process of turning out educated engineers from West Point. With already an overburdened corps engaged in the work of the Panama Canal, engaged in the work of improvement of our rivers and harbors, a work which will be expanded indefinitely in the future, involving appropriations of from forty to fifty million dollars annually, the only provision we make for experts in this work is the employment of engineers belonging to the Engineer Corps of the Army.

I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he will assent to the addition of this amendment. I will read it to him again.

Mr. KNOX. I paid close attention to the amendment as the Senator from Nevada read it, and I can not agree to it for the reason that if we were to insert that in the joint resolution, we would be just where we were before, and that is nowhere, on this proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will move the amendment I read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Mc-LAURIN] to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be added to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment submitted by Mr. Knox, the following:

That in connection with such memorials the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, an advisory council, to be known as the council of the arts, composed of eminent architects, painters, sculptors, landscape architects, and laymen, such body to be selected from names submitted to the President by the directors of the American Institute of Architects.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNox]. The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox]

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire that the original resolution as proposed, upon which the vote will recur, be read in order that we may see what we shall vote upon in case the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] is

Mr. WARREN. Then, I suppose, the Senator calls for the reading of the last paragraph only, which contains the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BACON. I only want so much of it read as will show what we shall have the opportunity to vote upon if the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is defected. ment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is defeated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out the following paragraph:

Be it further resolved, That it is hereby recommended-

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not ask for the reading of any amendment. I want to know the proposition as it will be before the Senate if the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania should not be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the original paragraph as heretofore amended by the Senate and as it would stand if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania should be rejected.

Mr. WETMORE. Mr. President, that would be the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], as I understand.

Mr. BACON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Montana was accepted by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary. The provision as it stands reads as follows:

Be it further resolved, It is hereby recommended that action be taken looking to the construction of a suitable memorial which shall be worthy his great fame, his service to humanity and to his country, and fittingly commemorate the grandeur of character, the nobility of life, and the epoch-making career of Abraham Lincoln.

It is proposed to substitute for those words the following:

Be it further resolved, That with a view to the construction of suitable memorials to commemorate the public services and character of Abraham Lincoln, which memorials may include a great national highway, to be called "The Lincoln Way," from Washington to the battle-field of Gettysburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses in making a survey, plans for construction, and estimates of cost by engineers of the United States Army for said highway.

Mr. WETMORE. Mr. President, I am sorry to say that I consider this amendment a committal to the Gettysburg project, and therefore I trust that it will be voted down.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Upon the question of the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. We are now voting directly upon the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] as amended, so that the vote will be "yea" in favor of it and "nay" against it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins], who is absent. I suppose, of course, that this is not a question upon which he would have any concern; but, at any rate, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I desire the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley] for a moment. I made an arrangement with the Senator from Texas for a transfer of pairs for to-day. I ask if he desires that to stand on this vote?

Mr. BAILEY. That fact had escaped my attention for the moment. I am glad that the Senator has called my attention to it. He can vote now, and after the roll call is concluded I shall vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I vote "nay."

Mr. TAYLOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Briggs] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I ann pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money.] I announce my

So Mr. Knox's amendment was agreed to. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Nixon

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McLAURIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be added at the end of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to add the following:

And may include a highway from Washington to Manassas, Va., which shall be surveyed as the one heretofore named herein to Gettysburg.

Mr. BACON. I move and insert "Richmond." I move to strike out the word "Manassas"

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out "Manassas" and insert in lieu thereof "Richmond."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to hear the joint resolution read as it has been amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the joint resolution as amended be read. Without objection, Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the 12th day of February, 1909, the same being the centennial anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, be, and the same is hereby, made a special legal holiday in the District of Columbia and the Territories. Be it further

Resolved, That it is hereby recommended that the American people at home and abroad, the States and Territories, and the District of Columbia, all municipalities and towns, all organized bodies of citizens, all associations, and all people generally, set apart the centennial of the birth of Abraham Lincoln to do reverent honor to his memory. Be it further

Resolved, It is hereby recommended that at all places where people gather for public purposes, and in schools, colleges, and all seats of learning, addresses be made in eulogy of Lincoln, and other special and appropriate exercises be held. Be it further

Resolved, That the President be authorized to issue a proclamation, in accordance with the foregoing, inviting governors of States and Territories and mayors of cities to participate in the public recognition of the centennial anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, recommending that said day be observed as a special holiday. Be it further recommending that said day be observed as a special holiday. Be it further.

*Resolved, That, with a view to the construction of suitable memorials to commemorate the public services and character of Abraham Lincoln, which memorials may include a great national highway, to be called the "Lincoln Way," from Washington to the battlefield of Gettysburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses in making a survey, plans for construction, and estimates of cost by engineers of the United States Army for said highway.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I understand the latter part of the joint resolution was the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I purposely refrained from voting on the question of its adoption because I did not understand it. I desire to vote on the joint resolution, but before voting on it I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if it is in contemplation that the Federal Government shall exercise the power to condemn the land necessary for the construction of this highway in the event that the owners of it decline to sell?

Mr. KNOX. It seems to me, Mr. President, that that is a matter that will have to be determined when Congress decides whether or not it will go on with this work. We are not in a position now to commit ourselves as to what method should be employed to acquire title to the lands over which that road might be built.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I would have said two or three years ago without the slightest hesitation that the Federal Government could not authorize the condemnation of land for the purpose of constructing a highway like this within a State. am still of that opinion, though I am aware that the Supreme Court of the United States sustained the condemnation proceeding for the purpose, I believe, of acquiring an electric or other kind of railway in the Gettysburg Park. Just exactly how that was within the power of the Federal Government I have never yet been able to work out to my satisfaction; but the learned justice who delivered the opinion in that case, as I remember, said that the establishment of that park was calculated to cultivate the patriotism of the people, and therefore within the power of the Federal Government.

If we are to accept that broad doctrine, unquestionably, then, the construction and maintenance of this great highway is within the power of the Federal Government. But I am myself unable to subscribe to a doctrine of that kind. I regret very much that I am not permitted to vote for so much of the bill as proposes to do honor to the memory of Mr. Lincoln without asserting what I believe to be a dangerous power in the Federal Government. If the Federal Government can go into a State of this Union and condemn a private citizen's property for the purpose of building one highway-not a highway for the purpose of regulating commerce, but a highway wholly disconnected with the commerce and other powers of the Government-then there seems to be no limitation on it.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Texas has said, but I want to ask him whether the two decisions, the one to which he refers in the case of the Gettysburg Railway Company, and particularly the Kobly case from Wisconsin, with which he is familiar, do not cover this proposition?

Mr. BAILEY. They cover it, but not to my satisfaction.
Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator doubt that the Congress of the United States may authorize the Secretary of War to survey a route for a road?

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all, provided he surveys it in pursuance of some power possessed by the Federal Government. For instance, he would have the right to survey a route for a military highway if it were essential to the defense of the United States; and I do not doubt now—I never doubted even before the court so decided—that, under the power to regulate commerce, Congress might authorize the construction of a highway, either rail or dirt, along which the commerce of the country might move. But it seems that, while this is a fitting tribute to pay the memory of a great man, you could pay it without raising any question as to power.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Congress is constantly making appropriations for investigation, surveys, and estimates for the improvement of streams, although in many cases it is very doubtful whether they are navigable and very doubtful whether their improvement is within the jurisdiction of the United States. I think that the question involved in this amendment is simply a question of examination. I do not in any sense agree with my colleague [Mr. Wetmore] that this is a committal on the part of the Senate to the building of any road anywhere. By its express terms it is simply making an inquiry, and all the questions which may arise when Congress undertakes to order this work, if they ever should, would be considered then. It seems to me that the Senator from Texas is crossing a bridge which is certainly not immediately in front of us when he is suggesting that there may be constitutional objections to the construction of this road.

Mr. BAILEY. We are just as certain to come to that bridge as we live. The Senator from Rhode Island can take my word for it. I believe, Mr. President, that it is very unfortunate that we have coupled with the general proposition an amendment of this kind.

I want to disclaim here and now any thought of objecting to Gettysburg. That is a battlefield consecrated by the richest blood of men on both sides in the war between the States. It was there that the soldiers from my own State, though fighting on the side that lost, and losing that day they lost that war, yet won a glory as imperishable as the victorious army did. have no prejudice growing out of the war, and certainly I have none against Gettysburg. If we are to build a highway would as soon it be built to that battlefield as to any other; but I do not believe in the doctrine that because it will cultivate the patriotism of our people for the Government to exercise the great right of eminent domain in a given case that the exercise of such a power can be justified, and for that reason I asked the Senator from Pennsylvania whether or not it was contemplated that the Government would exercise the right of eminent domain. I freely say that if I believed it was intended to compel any citizen of the United States to sell his property against his will in order to construct this highway I would vote against it, whatever sentiment might move me the other way. On the other hand, if it has been arranged, or if it is understood that no power of condemnation is to be exercised on that right of way, if it can be acquired without resort to the courts, then I would have no objection to it.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to hear read that part of the resolution which gives the right to condemn.

Mr. WARREN. Are we ready to proceed with a vote?
Mr. RAYNER. I desire to say one word.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland has the floor. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish the Senator to yield, but I hope he will speak so that we may hear him. I did not know what his intention was.

Mr. RAYNER. I merely want to say a word about this matter.

There may be some question here about the right to con-I have not the volume here. I have sent for it. But this identical question, I think, has been settled in the Gettysburg case. The court there held that the Government had the right to condemn. I did not think they would ever decide that way, but there is no doubt about the decision. While I did not oppose the provision of the Senator from Nebraska, I had this decision in mind when I said that I would not object on the part of Maryland to ceding a right of way, because I thought this difficulty might occur, and I knew there would be no difficulty about ceding the right of way, because everybody in Maryland, I am sure, would be willing to give the right of way. But I had the difficulty in mind, and I sent for the case, and I find that the United States has the absolute right to condemn. I agree with the Senator from Texas it is wrong, but demn. I agree with the Senator from Texas it is wrong, but there it is. It has the right to condemn the highway, accord-ing to this decision.

Mr. WARREN. It seems to me that question is far away.

The Senate is now in full attendance, and Senators are waiting to finish the short portion of the legislative appropriation bill remaining. It seems to me we might defer further discussion upon a point which is not at issue now.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it never occurred to me until the matter was suggested by what has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Texas that possibly my suggestion of Richmond in place of Gettysburg might be construed into an objection to having that particular honor fall to the battle of Gettysburg. I had no such thought in my mind. I quite agree with him that neither side to the battle of Gettysburg has any reason to be ashamed of anything that occurred there in that Titanic combat and that the deeds of the men who were there engaged constitute an imperishable monument to the valor of the whole American people.

I do not depreciate Gettysburg in any manner, and have no objection to it on that ground. My thought in suggesting Richmond was that, if the road was to be built to a battlefield, a road which would lead through the great battlefields of Virginia, where the tide of battle ebbed and flowed for four long years, would be a very much more appropriate tribute than a road leading simply to one battlefield. That was the sole thought in my mind.

Mr. BAILEY. And one connecting the two capitals.

Mr. BACON. And one connecting the capital of the United States with the capital of the confederacy.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to add one remark on the question of constitutional scruples. We have a great national cemetery at Gettysburg, owned and controlled by the Federal Government, and I do not see what constitutional objection there can possibly be to the Federal Government constructing a highway from its reservation here in the District of Columbia to another reservation in the State of Pennsylvania to open communication between two distinct pieces of government property. It seems to me that is a sufficient answer to all constitutional objections that may possibly be urged.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. Carter, the title was amended so as to read:

"A joint resolution relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, and for other purposes."

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. As a committee amendment, I move, on page 3, line 5, to strike out "four hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. In line 6, on the same page, I move to strike out "two hundred and twenty" and insert "five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. WARREN. That, I believe, completes the committee amendments to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be considered as concurred in.

Mr. BAILEY. Did I understand the Chair to announce that the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole would be considered as concurred in?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. "If there is no objection." The Chair will again put the question. Without objection, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be considered as concurred in. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. I object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can reserve a vote on any particular amendment he desires.

Mr. BAILEY. I was going to say as to all the amendments, outside of those relating to increases of salaries, I am perfectly willing for the vote to be taken in gross. amendments which increase the present salaries of various officers of the United States I want separate votes.

Mr. WARREN. To what salaries does the Senator alludethe judicial and executive?

Mr. BAILEY. I want a vote on every one of those amendments. I think, however, in order to save the time of the Senate, if we can have one vote which appears to be decisive it will be sufficient.

Mr. WARREN. Then, first vote on the question of the President's salary

Mr. BAILEY. Well, I am content to have it taken that way. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] is now in his seat. That is one thing I wanted to do-to wait until he came in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection; although it is an unusual course perhaps, the Senate will reserve action upon the amendments reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole until after there have been separate votes upon such amendments as the Senator indicates. After there have been such votes, then the other amendments will be considered lines 14, 15, 16, and 17.

Mr. BAILEY. I have not the bill before me, and I will inquire of the Senator to what that relates?

Mr. BORAH. The Executive.
Mr. WARREN. The President's salary.
Mr. BAILEY. The President's salary.
Mr. WARREN. There is no objection to a vote being taken on that now, if the Senator desires it. As I understand, the bill is now in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is now in the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I will ask to reserve—
Mr. WARREN. The Senator need not reserve it. He can move his amendment now. The bill is in the Senate and open of the committee. I merely desire to reserve a separate vote upon the amendments increasing the salaries of judicial officers.

Mr. BORAH. We are now in the Senate.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is now in the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. And open to amendment?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. And open to amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Have the other amendments been concurred

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They have not been. The Chair suggested that the amendments on which Senators desired to have separate votes be first acted upon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the question is whether the amendments made as in the Committee of the Whole shall be concurred in in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the question, and Senators desire a separate vote upon some of the amendments. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which will be

Mr. BORAH. On page 41, line 14, I move to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five," making it read "$75,000." The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 41, line 14, in the committee amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, it is proposed to strike out "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-five," so as to read:

For compensation of the President of the United States, $75,000.

Mr. WARREN. Just a word, Mr. President. The Senator should know that when we are through with the bill here it must go to conference, where none of the salaries can be increased, but where we are almost sure to have to compromise with the House. In other words, in conference we often have to do as they say in horse trading, "split the difference."

It seems to me Senators could now fairly take the chance of allowing this bill to go to conference as it stands, because we are almost sure to meet resistance and reduction there. the Senator would withdraw his motion. If not, I hope it may be voted down, for, in the first place, to pass it as offered would be to reduce it practically to the present pay of the President, and would not practically raise the salary at all. I think the salary ought to be raised. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming what is the present pay?

Mr. WARREN. The President's pay proper is now $50,000, and $25,000 a year we have been appropriating for traveling and other similar expenses.

Mr. McLAURIN. That makes it $75,000?

Mr. WARREN. Seventy-five thousand dollars.
Mr. McLAURIN. That is the present pay of the President?
Mr. WARREN. That is.
Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to know when that got to

Mr. WARREN. We have appropriated the $25,000 each year for three years

Mr. McLAURIN. Then within the last four years we have raised the salary of the President $25,000?

Mr. WARREN. We have not raised the salary of the President as such, but it amounts to practically the same, because in the sundry civil bill we have allowed $25,000 a year.

Mr. McLAURIN. That has been the effect of it? Mr. WARREN. Yes. Mr. McLAURIN. That raised the salary $25,000?

Mr. LODGE. No; not quite that.

Mr. WARREN. I may say it raised his possible compensation, altogether.

Mr. McLAURIN. Compensation.

Mr. LODGE. But the provision in the sundry civil bill was limited exclusively to transportation.

Mr. McLAURIN. I understood that the Senator from Wyoming just a little while ago stated that if we now fix the salary at $75,000 it will not be any raise in the salary of the President of the United States. The thing that troubled me about that expression was that the compensation of the President of the United States, to use the term of the Constitution, must now be $75,000 a year. When the present President of the United States came into office it was only $50,000, as I understand, and the Constitution says it shall not be increased during his term of office; and the thing that worried me was to know how, if move his amendment now. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that perfectly. I do not myself propose any amendment. I am simply resisting the amendment the Constitution, voted. That is one of the reasons why we want to put it in better shape and fix a salary for the President which shall be definite and which will cover all expenses.

Mr. McLAURIN. Then it was of questionable constitutionality, and it is desired-

Mr. WARREN. Yes; it was questioned. I am not asserting what it may be on my part. When the Senator speaks of total amount of salary he must have heard me qualify it by saying it was practically that.

Mr. McLAURIN. It is the same thing, and "things which are equal to the same thing or equal things are equal to each other.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I was a member of the committee that recommended to the Senate the increase of salary, and I was a member of the committee that reported the bill to the Senate. Without violating the rules of the Senate by stating what occurred in committee, I desire to say that I am one of those who believe we have no authority to increase the emoluments of the President in any shape after he has taken his office. I voted on both occasions against the $25,000 appropriation, not because I was not willing that the President should have it, but because I did not believe we had the authority to vote it. I do not believe so now.

Mr. President, when the opportunity was presented I objected to the $100,000 salary. I made a suggestion then, and I made it subsequently in another place, that I was willing to give the President of the United States a salary of $75,000. Then I was willing to give him, in addition to that—which we now have the authority to do, because it applies only to the next President and not to the present President, and there is no constitutional objection to giving the President whatever we choose—$25,000 as a contingent fund, to be used in his own discretion for any purpose that he saw fit. I stated that I would not consent to the President of the United States being asked to report to Congress how he had spent the $25,000.

Mr. President, I know very well-I have had some opportunities to know-that the President of the United States is called upon at all times for contributions for various purposes in charity and in various other ways and a multitude of expenses attach to that office which can not be provided for by law. I was willing that the President should have a hundred thousand dollars provided I knew certainly that there would be no further sum added, as there has been added before, contrary, as I believe, to the Constitution, after he shall have taken his office. I voted to make the salary $75,000. I stated then I was quite willing to vote, in addition thereto, $25,000, as, if I may so say, a contingent fund for his general use.

I do not think a hundred thousand dollars for the President's salary is an extravagant sum, everything considered. It was stated here the other day that the President of France gets $125,000, and I thought perhaps there would be some suggestion that we should make it $125,000 in this case.

Mr. President, in this discussion it has been agreed that the $100,000 is to be final; that there is to be no additional sum allowed. I know we can not bind future Congresses, but I believe the policy of the party in power may be fairly determined by the declarations that have been made here.

I am not going to insist upon the President receiving a salary of $75,000 after the Senate has carefully considered the question and voted $100,000. I am going to accept that as the action of the Senate, so far as I am personally concerned. I do not believe the people of the United States will particularly complain of that. I think, as to some of the other salaries, they may make complaint; but I doubt very much whether the salary of the President will cause any complaint.

Mr. President, I would rather myself vote for a hundred thousand dollars straight at any time than to vote for $25,000, as we have been giving him for the last few years in absolute viola-tion, as I believe, of the Constitution of the United States; and if a hundred thousand dollars will be accepted by the party in power as the proper amount, I shall have no special complaint.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator, and for that reason withdraw the vote I gave.

Mr. McLAURIN. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. Money] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber by illness. Mr. SCOTT. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Elkins] is detained from the city. If he were here he would vote "nay."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BORAH. On page 11, line 21, I move to strike out the words "one thousand two hundred dollars each," and to insert the words "one thousand four hundred and forty dollars each," so as to read:

Eight conductors of elevators at $1,440 each.

Mr. WARREN. I hope that amendment will not prevail. That is invading the right of a class of employees who ought to be treated together, and it will be taken care of in due season. I do not think the amendment ought to pass at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. On page 11, line 21, I move to strike out the word "two" before "hundred," and to insert the word "four," so that the pay of elevator conductors will be $1,400, instead of $1,200, as now.

Mr. WARREN. That is the same amendment that was offered by the Senator from Idaho except a change of $40.

Mr. NELSON. No; it is not the same amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary. On page 11, line 21, before the word "hundred," strike out "two" and insert "four," so as to read:

Eight conductors of elevators, at $1,400 each.

Mr. WARREN. That is exactly the same that we just passed upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Elevator conductors will report at the office of the chief engineer at S o'clock a. m., and not leave the building, without permission, until the elevators are closed.

During week days, elevator conductors will operate the cars from 8.30 o'clock a. m. until 5 o'clock p. m., or later if a Senator desires.

On Sundays, the east public elevator, known as "elevator No. 2," must be operated from 9 o'clock a. m. until 4 o'clock p. m., or later if a Senator desires.

Elevator conductors must observe the following rules:

Bring the floor of the car to the level of the outside floor before opening the grille doors, and see that all doors are closed before starting the car.

Maintain a standing position while operating the elevator, and not leave the car, under any circumstances, until relieved by another conductor or until the elevator is closed.

Keep the elevator machinery in a neat and tidy condition, and notify the engineer in charge when the elevator is closed.

When relieved, remain in their respective rooms or in the office of the chief engineer, where they can be called for immediate service.

Carry freight (wood, documents, etc.) before 9.30 a. m. or after adjournment of the Senate, but not let the hauling of freight at any time interfere with the passenger service.

Limit the passengers to the capacity of the cars, which is—No. 1, 12 persons, exclusive of conductor.

No. 2, 14 persons, exclusive of conductor.

No. 3, 10 persons, exclusive of conductor.

No. 4, 8 persons, exclusive of conductor.

No. 4, 8 persons, exclusive of conductor.

And only thirty days' leave during the year.

Mr. TELLER. I should like the Senator who offered this amendment to explain what evil he is trying to cure. This is a question that I understand is under the control of the Committee on Rules of this body. We have had no complaint, so far as I know as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, concerning the elevator people. I do not know, nor can any other Senator tell, how much change it is proposed to make in the regulations as to the elevators.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that my purpose in sending the memorandum to the desk to have it read was to call attention to the exacting duties required of the men who run the elevators and who receive $1,200 a year under the present law. This does not seem to me to be a sufficient amount for these men to properly support their families and maintain themselves.

It seems to me that with the extreme liberality which the Senate has shown in the raising of the salaries of judges, the Speaker, the Vice-President, and the President, it might well lift the salaries of the elderly men employed as elevator op-erators in the Senate end of the Capitol. They sometimes work seven days a week, performing service from early in the morning until late at night. It seems to me to be a reasonable request to make the little increase in salary provided in the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if those regulations represent the present rules.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that they do, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Then the Senator does not desire to change the rules?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no. I simply had these rules read to inform the Senate of the time which these men are required to put in daily in their employment.

Mr. TELLER. I sympathize with the Senator as to the question of the salaries of these people. If the Senator wants to make a motion to raise their salaries, I will support it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is an amendment pending. The Senator from Minnesota offered the amendment. I simply sent the memorandum to the desk to have it read in support of the

Mr. TELLER. I did not understand what the motion of the Senator from Minnesota was.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, I will state that I moved an amendment to increase the salary of the elevator boys-I believe there are eight of them-from $1,200 to $1,400 a year. We have a lot of messengers here who get $1,440 a year, and when Congress adjourns they go home and do nothing at all and draw their salaries. These elevator boys are kept here all the summer and get only thirty days' vacation. In view of the great raise that we have made in salaries in other directions, it seems to me it is picayunish and lilliputian to refuse this increase in the pay of these hard-working elevator boys.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 78, line 6, strike out the words "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICK. In lines 17 and 18, page 9, I move to strike out the words "four hundred and forty" and to insert "eight hundred," so as to read:

The Secretary. On page 9, lines 17 and 18, strike out "four hundred and forty" and insert "eight hundred," so that it will Forty-six messengers, at $1,800 each.

Mr. WARREN. These matters have never been before the Committee on Appropriations for consideration. I shall be compelled to make a point of order against the amendment. We must consider the subject-matter at some other time. There is no estimate for the increase. It has not been recommended by any committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. WARREN. The point of order is, first, it is not estimated for; and, second, it has not been recommended by any standing committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I reserved a separate vote on the amendments made when the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, raised the salary of the judges, but in view of the very decisive vote of the Senate on the increase of the President's salary, I hardly think it worth while to occupy its time by a separate vote, and I shall not demand it, nor shall I occupy the time of the Senate further than to say—and it is the last word I shall have to say on it—that it is an amazing spectacle to me to see the legislative department of this Government assert its inferiority to the executive and judicial departments.

In the early days of the Republic it was believed that the legislative department of the Government would be the most important and the most potential. But there seems to have been a gradual but a distinct change of sentiment in that regard, and we have now reached a point when we vote that all executive officers of importance are entitled to higher salaries than Senators and Representatives; and then we follow that by voting that all the judicial officers of the Governmentthe Chief Justice, associate justices, circuit judges, and district judges—are all worth more to the people of the United States than Senators and Representatives. If I were disposed to be vicious in disposition, I would say I am inclined to think they are.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, aside from those that have been amended in the Senate, will be considered in gross and, without objection, they are concurred in.

Mr. BAILEY. I want the right to vote on them. Mr. WARREN. What is the motion of the Se What is the motion of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BAILEY. No motion is required. The motion is that these amendments be concurred in in the Senate, I understand. I am perfectly willing that the Chair shall put the vote on them in gross, so that I can get a chance to vote "no."

Mr. WARREN. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the question. The question is on concurring in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, aside from those that have been amended in the Senate. The Senator from Texas is willing that the question be taken in gross.
Mr. BAILEY. In gross.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senate has been in prolonged session for the entire week, coming here early and staying late. In response to the request of many Senators who desire a day to attend to departmental and other outside business, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next. I will then ask that the Senate take up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill after the routine morning business on Monday.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I understand that the House of Representatives will not consider any more pension bills after next week. I therefore desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of two or three bills which are now on the Pension Calendar. The first bill for which I ask consideration is Senate bill No. 8628.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 8628) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from West Virginia, before the unanimous consent for which he asks is given, if this bill is reported unanimously from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT. It is a unanimous report, as I understand it. All of these reports are unanimous. on the calendar.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask the Senator from West Virginia how many pensioners are carried in this bill?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not know the exact number. Mr. McLAURIN. About how many? Has the Senator any idea?

Mr. SCOTT. About 100, I will say to the Senator. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll at the rate per month therein specified the following-named persons:

Lucius Fuller, late of Company I, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Mr. SCOTT. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. On page 15, line 2, after the words "rate of," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty," so as to read:

The name of Gilbert L. Holmes, late of Company E, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and first lieutenant Company I, Second Regiment West Virginia Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 25409.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill,

the title of which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 25409) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if this is simply another bill with additional names of a character similar to the preceding bill?

Mr. SCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Texas that the Committee on Pensions in making pension reports distribute the bills, and one Senator reports one portion of the bills and another Senator reports another portion of the bills. The bill for which I have asked consideration was reported by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], after a unanimous agreement by the full committee that the report should be favorable.

Mr. CULBERSON. In other words, instead of having a great number of individual bills, the names of pensioners are put into two or three bills.

Mr. SCOTT. And the President has to sign but one bill, instead of having to sign 100 or 200 bills. That was the object of the consolidation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of one more pension bill, which was reported from the Committee on Pensions by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles]. It is Senate bill 8629.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 8629) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. It proposes to place upon the pension roll, at the rate per month therein specified, the following-named persons:

James G. Hannard, late of Company E, Seventeenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension of $20.

John L. Johnson, late of Company A, Second Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension of $12.

Harry W. Bershon, late of Company G, Twelfth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension of $12.

Franklin Presley, late of Company G, Twelfth Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian war, and pay him a pension of $16.

George A. Sorrels, late of Company C, Second Regiment U. S. Artillery, and pay him a pension of $24.

Helen L. Seymour, widow of Isaac Knight Seymour, late lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $40.

Jesse Tyre, late of Capt. Joseph J. Knight's company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Indian war, and pay him a pension of $16.

Harry H. Short, late of Company B, Two hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension of $30.

James Brown, late of Capt. W. S. Buckley's Company K, Ninth Regiment Oregon Militia, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian war, and pay him a pension of $16.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, on page 4, line 8, after the words "rate of," I move to strike out "twenty-five" and to insert

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 4, line 8, after the words "rate of," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and to insert "thirty," so as to read:

The name of Emilie Le Barbier Crofton, widow of William M. Crofton, late first lieutenant and captain First Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of the said William M. Crofton until he reaches the age of 16

BELLEFOURCHE LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration-

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 7377.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the considera-tion of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will present the request of the Senator from South Dakota. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (8, 7377) authorizing the creation of a land district in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the Bellefourche land district."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? Mr. KEAN. Of course, I have no objection to the bill, Mr. President. I know nothing about it. It is a local matter.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am very anxious the bill should be now taken up and considered. It will take but a moment.

Mr. KITTREDGE. There are some amendments to be presented to that bill, which will take some little time. I think it had better go over.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I do not understand there are any amendments proposed. The bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands without amendment, and no amendments were suggested or proposed. The measure is entirely satisfactory to the people of the region affected by the proposed measure, and they are anxious for its enactment. Its passage is recommended by the Interior Department. It affects a large number of people in the western part of the State, and is a matter of great importance to them and for their convenience and accommodation.

I have spoken with the Member of the House from that section of the State and, as I understand it, there are no substantial differences in connection with the measure. Should there be, I am satisfied a solution can be had later. Considering the importance of the matter to the people interested, and that the time of this session is rapidly passing, I should be glad to have the bill taken up and considered at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?
Mr. KITTREDGE. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the junior Senator from South Dakota. The bill will go over without prejudice.

KANSAS RIVER BRIDGE, KANSAS CITY, KANS.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold that motion until I can have a bridge bill considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KEAN. I yield if it will give rise to no discussion. Mr. CURTIS. I think it will not. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8333) to authorize the Edgewater Connecting Railway Company to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Kansas River at or near Kansas City, Kans., in the county of Wyandotte, State

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, it is very important that we should have an executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL AT ARMY POINT, CAL.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8259) providing for the construction of a light and fog signal at Army Point, Suisun Bay, California.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to construct a light and fog signal at Army Point, Suisun Bay, California, at a cost not to exceed $10,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALTER W. KEEFE.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8733) for the relief of Walter W. Keefe.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $427.75 to Walter W. Keefe, late civil plumber in the Quartermaster's Department at Fort Egbert, Alaska, for property destroyed by fire at Arlington dock, Seattle, Wash., on May 6, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADVERSE LAND CLAIMS IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8587) to amend sections 2325 and 2326 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Public Lands, with amendments.

Mr. KEAN. I will ask if there is a report accompanying that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that there is a report.

Mr. NELSON. There is a report with the bill; but I will say, Mr. President, that this bill was recommended by the General Land Office and sent in by them. It only relates to matters in Alaska.

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator from Minnesota says it is all right, I know it must be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a committee amendment, which the Secretary will state.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota to explain what the bill does. I do not even know what the sections are which it is proposed to amend.

Mr. NELSON. The bill relates to cases where it is sought to acquire a patent to mineral lands under an adverse claim. In such cases the claimant must advertise for sixty days and post a notice for sixty days, and then anybody who has objection must file it in the sixty days. The distances in Alaska are so immense and the means of travel so poor that the time now allowed is found to be too short. This bill gives eight months, instead of sixty days, to file objections. So with reference to proving up. The bill is simply to meet conditions in Alaska. It was prepared by the General Land Office, sent to me, and I introduced it. It affects only Alaska.

Mr. CULBERSON. From what committee does the bill come? Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Public Lands. The committee were unanimous,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 1, page 1, line 11, before the word "months," it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so as to make the section read:

That section 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States p. 426) is hereby amended by adding to the end of said section the fol-

(p. 426) is hereby amended by adding to the end of said section the following words:

"Provided, That in the district of Alaska any person or association of persons having or asserting any adverse interest or claim to the tract of land or any portion thereof sought to be patented shall, during said period of posting and publication, or within eight months thereafter, file in the land office where such application is pending, under oath, such adverse claim and shall, within sixty days after the filing thereof, begin an action to quiet title in a court of competent jurisdiction within the district of Alaska."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 10, before the word "months," to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so as to make the section read:

the word "months," to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so as to make the section read:

Szc. 2. That section 2326 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (p. 427) is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Szc. 2326. That where an adverse claim is filed during the period of publication, or within eight months thereafter if the land involved is within the district of Alaska, it shall be upon oath of the person or persons making the same, and shall show the nature, boundarles, and extent of such adverse claim, and all proceedings, except the publication of notice and making and filing of the affidavit thereof, shall be stayed until the controversy shall have been settled or decided by a court of competent jurisdiction or the adverse claim waived. It shall be the duty of the adverse claimant, within thirty days after filing his claim, or within sixty days after filing his claim if the land involved is within the district of Alaska, to commence proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction to determine the question of the right of possession and prosecute the same with reasonable diligence to final judgment, and a failure so to do shall be a waiver of his adverse claim. After such judgment shall have been rendered the party entitled to the possession of the claim, or any portion thereof, may, without giving further notice, file a certified copy of the judgment roll with the register of the land office, together with the certificate of the surveyor-general that the requisite amount of labor has been expended or improvements made thereon, and the description required in other cases, and shall pay to the receiver $5 per acre of his claim, together with the proper fees, whereupon the whole proceedings and the judgment roll shall be certified by the register to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and a patent shall issue thereon for the claim or such portion thereof as the applicant shall appear, from the decision of the court, to rightly possess. If it appears from the decision of the court to r

LIFE-PRESERVERS ON MOTOR VESSELS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Michi-

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not feel like objecting to the consideration of this bill, but I see no reason why we should not take up the calendar in regular order for an hour, and I think after this bill is passed I will object to the further consideration of bills by unanimous consent, and let us go on in the regular way.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I have no objection to this bill, but I want to say that it is important that we should have an executive session this afternoon, and I hope, after a little while, we may be allowed to have it without controversy.

Sec. 3. That for any violation of this act the owner shall be liable to a penalty of $10 for each such life-preserver lacking or improperly stowed.

SEC. 4. That this act shall apply to foreign vessels on December 31.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect on June 1, 1909.

Mr. KEAN. I ask to boats of what size the bill applies?

Mr. FRYE. There is no limit whatever, and none ought to be required.

Mr. KEAN. Does it apply to rowboats? Mr. FRYE. Rowboats are not propelled by naphtha and gasoline. This bill covers boats propelled by naphtha and PUBLIC PARK IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6327) providing for the purchase of a reservation for a public park in the District of Columbia. I will say that a similar bill has passed the Senate twice before, and I hope there will be no objection to this bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $210,000 for the purchase of land for a public park near the intersection of Branch avenue and Pennsylvania avenue, SE., known as the "Carpenter tract" and the "Pennsylvania Avenue Heights tract," and so forth.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MISSOULA, MONT.

Mr. DIXON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8034) to increase the limit of cost for purchase of site and erection of a post-office building at Missoula, Mont.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I wish that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scort], chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, were on the floor, as I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, by striking out "fifty" and inserting "sixty," in the last line. However, I will say that I called his attention to the matter, but the bill had already been reported by the committee, and he suggested that I offer the amendment on the floor of the Senate. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 22, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar—pension bills—in order to-day, be in order to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal; that is, that to-morrow be substituted for to-day for

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar—pension bills-shall be in order to-morrow in lieu of to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 26916) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, for fulfilling treaty relations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 1897), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26394, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. MANN in

The CHAIRMAN. The pending proposition is the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley], which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 7, after the word "constructed," strike out all down to and including line 12.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the committee for a moment. We have reached that portion of the bill relating to the increase of the navy, and the first paragraph provides for the construction of two first-class battle ships. I understand that there is a desire on the part of some Members for a little debate, and I am going to ask unanimous consent that we have debate upon this proposition for one hour; one half to be controlled by some gentleman in opposition to the recommendation of the committee and the other half to be controlled by the chairman of the committee, and that then we come to a vote upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour, to be equally divided between those in favor of the paragraph and those opposed to the provision in the bill; one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois, and the other half by some gentleman in opposition thereto.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to ask this question: Whether or not there are not two classes of Members who are opposed to this provision in the bill, one those who want to strike out or reduce and another to

Mr. FOSS. I think not. There are only those who are opposed and those who are in favor of the committee proposition, so far as I have been able to learn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether it would not be possible to extend the time to two hours. I know myself of four or five gentlemen who wish to talk on this battle-ship proposition, and it will be impossible for them to be heard if only thirty minutes on a side would be permitted. permitted.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, we have a number of very important matters in this bill ahead, and it is my desire to get through to-day, if it is possible; but if we increase the time, as the gentleman suggests, we will not be able to do it, and I think most of the Members have made up their minds upon this proposition, and I doubt very much whether general dis-cussion would change the vote if it were taken at this time. I am very anxious that we should proceed, in view of the fact that there are other very important matters ahead-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for unanimous consent, as stated by the Chair, for one hour debate on this paragraph. Is these chiefficals on this paragraph. Is there objection?

Mr. GRIGGS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest an hour and a half to be equally divided-Several Members. Make it two hours.

Mr. FOSS. Then, I do not think we can get through with the bill to-day

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GRIGGS. I object. Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the parliamentary situation of this matter. Suppose this request is not granted; will there not be debate on the proposition, and will not that continue until the committee directs it be closed?

The CHAIRMAN. If the request of the gentleman be not granted, of course debate will continue so long as it may under the rules of the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object, then.
The CHAIRMAN. Objection has already been made.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Unless a motion like the gentleman has made, or some similar motion, prevails, nobody can speak more than five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody can speak more than five minutes, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me the sensible thing to do is to agree as to time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there is objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; lots of it.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to extend the time of debate to two hours. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois amends his request and asks unanimous consent that debate upon the pending paragraph, and all amendments thereto, be limited to two hours, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and the other half to be controlled by some one in opposition. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I will state that the gentleman from South Carolina offered the amendment, and it seems to me that he should be allowed to control the time in favor of the amendment. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] offered the amendment.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] be allowed to control the time in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois incor-The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois incorporate in his request the suggestion offered by the gentleman from Georgia, that one-half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]?

Mr. FOSS. I will.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows: On page 59, line 7, after the word "constructed," strike out the remainder of the paragraph down to and including line 12.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the effect of that amendment? We can not judge.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from South Carolina is first entitled to recognition. I suggest that the gentleman who proposed the amendment is first entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois in charge of the bill is entitled to recognition.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from South Carolina go ahead and explain his amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, if there ever was a time in our history when preparations for war and further increases of armaments are both unwise and unnecessary, it is the present; unwise because the normal annual expenditures in the national household now exceed the revenues by considerably more than $100,000,000, and unnecessary because we are not only at peace with all the world, but, what is more, we have wisely managed to safeguard our peace as it had never been safeguarded before. Hence every consideration of prudence and patriotism points to the present as the most propitious time to pause, temporarily at least, in our vast expenditures for so remote an eventuality as war.

We are all agreed that if our country were in any immediate danger of a foreign invasion or of war with a foreign foe no sacrifice would be too great for us to make for our defense. raise money, we would issue bonds and, if needs be, mortgage our homes for that purpose; in fact, this mighty Nation, rising in its own defense, would be a spectacle of patriotic self-sacrifice such as the world has never witnessed before.

In such a crisis we would justly scorn financial considerations or even deficits in the Treasury, for in the face of national danger all other interests must be subordinated to the one paramount duty, the national defense. I will even go further, and say that if there were but a well-authenticated probability of any foreign complications preparations to obey the law of selfdefense would still be in order. But at a time when there is no more probability of war than there is of lightning striking our houses at this season of the year-and I shall give my reasons for this assertion—at such a time, I claim, we have no moral right to run the Government into debt in order to pay for totally unnecessary increases of the implements of war. Before flattering national vanity by increasing the navy beyond the requirements of effective national defense I hold it to be our bounden duty to provide for the necessities of the peaceful development of the country and to subordinate the unreasonable demands of the jingo to the obligations which the Government owes to the peaceable citizen and taxpayer.

And as not one of us, Republican or Democrat, can furnish to his constituents a valid excuse for government expenditures in excess of government revenues, except in time of war, this duty becomes the more patent to all.

When I came to Congress sixteen years ago the navy cost us about $22,000,000 annually. This year's budget calls for over one hundred and thirty-five millions. While in that same period of time the population has increased only about 35 per cent, naval expenditures have increased over 600 per cent. These figures show that we have already gone back on the traditions handed down to us by the founders of the Republic, which teach us to rely for national safety upon our inherent strength, our righteousness, and our sense of justice, and that instead we have accepted the false theory through which monarchs from time immemorial have filched money from the pockets of their people, namely, the theory that armaments and man-killing machineries alone can vouchsafe security and peace. Do not the figures I have just cited bear out this assertion? And have we not actually been told time and again that a big navy is the best guaranty of peace? It is false, I say again, and our own history proves it to be false. Why was it that we enjoyed both peace and immunity from attack when we had no navy at all? Does it not dawn upon those who are misled by that fallacy and who constantly shout for more arsenals and more battle ships that, after all, there might have been something besides the Begublic of free men? Was not safety rather to be found in our isolated position, our numbers, out limitless resources, our love of peace and justice, our stout hearts, and in the patriotism born of liberty? [Applause.]

But let us for an instant meet on common ground. Let us admit, for argument's sake, a powerful navy to be the only real guaranty of our security. How many battle ships would we have to build to be absolutely secure? Certainly more than any other one nation, and in fact more than all other nations combined; for if naval armaments are to be the only safeguard of a nation's peace, we would be in constant danger of being overawed, because our big stick is not as big as all the other big sticks combined. Is not this the true logic of the plea for a bigger navy? And if it is, then all those who believe in the peace-promoting mission of the fleet would be forced to the conclusion that true patriotism requires the immediate construction, not of two, but of at least a hundred, Dreadnoughts. The fact, however, that they are willing to content themselves with two amounts to an abandonment of their own theory and is a practical admission that our safety rests on a better, securer foundation than mere iron clads, and one which our navy boomers quite evidently rely on themselves. From their view point two additional ships can not possibly afford adequate protection; and if, nevertheless, they are satisfied with this increase, we have a right to conclude that it makes no difference whether we build two more ships or none at all. Either course would be inconsistent with and contrary to the theory that the peace and tranquillity of the United States depends upon battle ships alone. If we are not to be entirely burglar proof until our navy equals that of Great Britain, or, in fact, the navies of all nations combined-and that is and must be the contention of our friends, the navy boomers-then it is immaterial whether we have two iron clads more or less at this time, because we are insecure in any event.

There is but one consistent course to be taken in this emergency. It is to refuse all unreasonable demands for additional armaments. Such a course will be consistent, in the first place, with American traditions; it will also be consistent with the enlightened sentiment of the world, and it will be consistent with our own professions, as well as with the actual situation.

The sentiment of the people everywhere is for peace and not for war, and that sentiment is stronger than you and I realize. The governments, too, seem willing at last to heed the voice of the people. As proof I point to The Hague conferences, the pan-American conferences, the many arbitration treaties, to the official recognition willingly accorded by the governments to the Interparliamentary Union, that world organization of lawmakers which aims to substitute arbitration and judicial decisions for war, and last, but not least, to the fact that, in spite of the recent political upheavals in the Balkans, peace has been maintained. There was a time, and it was true up to a few years ago, that you could not strike a match in the European Orient without causing a terrifice explosion, and what has happened there recently? Turkey has had a bloodless revolution, resulting in a new era of constitutional government; Austria quietly annexed the Turkish provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina; and the Servians declared their political independence; and all this without the shedding of a drop of human blood, when, ten years ago, either one of these events would have been sure to cause a world conflagration. Say what you please, but in my judgment it is the progressive thought and enlightenment of the people, the growing sentiment in favor of enduring peace, and the fear of the great military powers, because of that sentiment, to put their war machinery in motion. It seems almost as if in the incredibly short period of ten years a transition had taken place, as if the world had suddenly emerged, in this respect at least, from a state of semibarbarism and risen to a higher civilization, in the light of which rulers are either afraid or ashamed to draw the sword and prefer to keep the peace by resorting to arbitration or appealing to the courts established by international agreements. Certain it is that a new era has dawned and that the increased armaments which followed the First Hague Conference, and to which my friend from Illinois [Mr. Foss] so frequently refers, merely mark the last flickering up of the halo of the old system, a system, however, which is doomed to oblivion, doomed to give way to that new order of things which will recognize a legalized machinery of justice, instead of brute force, as the only legitimate means of settling international controversies.

Look at the wonderful change wrought within the last few years in our own country and its relations with the outside world. Thanks to the wisdom and energy of Secretary Root, we have concluded arbitration treaties with about 20 countries of America, Europe, and Asia. We have been relieved as a result of the Second Hague Conference of our real or fancied responsibilities with regard to the debts of the Latin-American countries, inasmuch as it was agreed at The Hague, all powers consenting, that contractual debts shall no longer be collectible by force. More than that, we have an understanding with Japan which, in my judgment, will go down into history as one of the greatest achievements of the present administration. the course of the remarks I submitted on the battle-ship question at the last session I used this language:

Unless we are all in ignorance as to the true situation—and it is incredible that the Mikado's diplomatic representatives should misrepresent it to us—a simple agreement to arbitrate differences and to mutually guarantee territorial integrity and undisputed home sovereignty would effectually dispose of the Japanese question for all time to come, and not a single battle ship will be needed to secure the benefits of such a treaty.

While our understanding with Japan-or call it agreement or declaration of principles, or anything else—does not go quite as far as I then indicated, it surely carries with it the guaranties of amity and good will, and forms the basis upon which peace between the two nations can be maintained. The situation regarding the Philippines has also been cleared. The fact of this outside possession of the United States has constantly been used as an argument for a bigger navy; but it is now clear that neither a European power nor Japan wants these islands, and our understanding with the Government of the Mikado covers this very point. From this brief review of the situation it appears that war involving this country is a much more remote possibility to-day than it ever was before.

Now, as to the latest scare about a possible war with Japan. Does it not strike the Members of this House as a most peculiar coincidence that every time we consider the naval appropriation bill there suddenly appears the handwriting on the wall picturing a war? Is it merely an accident that on the very day when we were expected to vote on battle ships the morning papers reproduce, with glaring headlines and in double-leaded type, the opinion of a New York editor, whose views otherwise they so frequently discredit and whose California interests are too well known to need any comment here? The President of the United States has, with praiseworthy foresight, repudiated in advance and on behalf of the Nation whatever action the California leg-islature may take with respect to the so-called "Japanese bills." Hence Japan can not, and I am sure will not, hold the American Nation responsible for whatever the legislature of a single State may do, no more than the British Government would hold us responsible for resolutions of mass meetings of Irish-American citizens denouncing England. The trouble between Cali-fornia and Japan can never be settled by war, because war never settles a question of right or wrong. It must be a ques-tion of the deepest concern to us, however, to find some way by which the supremacy of the Nation and its foreign policies can be maintained as against the rights of individual States. In other words, nátional obligations must be made as binding upon each state government as they are upon the National Government, and as sacred in their observance as the provisions of the Constitution itself. It is therefore really an American question, and one to be adjudicated by ourselves; and this being well understood all over the world, no sane nation will go to the length of declaring war upon us on account of it. of them may refuse to negotiate arbitration treaties with us because of the sovereign rights of the separate States, but they will no more dream of drawing the sword because of petty grievances arising from this situation than they would ever If a single State could interfere with our international affairs. coerce the National Government to make a state question a concern of the Government and to defend the action of a State, right or wrong, the case would, of course, be different; but in the determination of so grave a question as war, all governments are guided and controlled by the attitude of the responsible government and not by that of its press and its component

And as long as Japan is satisfied as to the correct and friendly attitude of the Government at Washington, no amount of jingo talk by the press or individuals will ever drive her into a bloody conflict with the United States. It is even unnecessary to call attention to the fact that our naval srength is double that of Japan to-day.

Mr. Chairman, on the pending question I shall vote in accordance with my conscientious convictions, and shall refuse to be influenced by either fear or intimidation. [Applause.]

[During the delivery of the above remarks the time of Mr. BARTHOLDT expired.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Can I have five minutes more?

Mr. FINLEY. I am afraid I will not be able to yield the gentleman any more, as all the time has been allotted.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FINLEY. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to consume some of his time now.

Mr. FOSS. I will ask if any gentleman on this side desires to occupy any time in support of the provision in the bill? No one seems to desire to be heard in favor of the proposition, so I will suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that he go ahead. Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he intends to use all the time in one speech; if not, the other side should occupy some of its time now.

Mr. FOSS. I do not think we will consume all of our time. I would like to ask, Mr. Chairman, if there is anyone who desires to speak in favor of the two battle ships on this side?

Mr. WALDO. A little later on I would like to have a few minutes, but not at the present.

Mr. FOSS. No one on this side now seems to desire to speak at this time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I submit that in order that this debate may proceed in an orderly way that the gentleman should consume some of his time.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like the gentleman from Illinois to repeat his statement.

Mr. FOSS. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the purpose of this amendment, it is to end the present policy of the United States of keeping a navy that will permit us to rank with the great naval powers of the world. It is a policy that we started upon quite a good many years ago; it is a policy that permitted us to succeed in the war with Spain; it is the policy to-day that makes the United States respected and its citizens sure of protection in all parts of this world. It seems to me that at this time, when we are hardly fairly started upon our programme to have a navy equal to any nation, that we should not call a halt. It is very pleasant to talk about peace and prosperity, but in this world no nation has peace or prosperity that is not able to defend itself.

The moment that we cease our naval programme our navy is on the way to decay. Naval ships only last a few years, and still fewer years do they remain equal to the naval improvements of other great powers. If we desire to protect our country; if we desire that our citizens be protected abroad; if we desire that our country shall continue to be respected as one of the great powers, we must continue our naval programme; we should vote against this amendment and see that at least two battle ships are ordered at this session of Congress.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire if there is any other gentleman who desires to speak now in favor of the two battle ships? If not, I suggest that my friend go ahead on the other side.

Mr. FINLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to strike from this measure the pretense that a nation is prepared for war in order to preserve peace; the mask that, consciously or unconsciously, hides the real spirit of warlike ambition; pretense that has prevailed among men from time immemorial.

It was the pretense under which the nations of the East, before the time of Alexander, invaded the nations of the West. It was done, they said, to check the growing spirit of aggression in the West. It was the pretense under which Alexander invaded Asia. He wished, he said, to forestall all future invasions by the Asiatics. It was the pretense under which the fortified castles of the middle ages were erected, the barons armed against each other, and perpetual warfare was carried on. This condition grew so fearful that men almost forgot the peaceful avocations of life, while each nobleman increased the thickness of his castle wall, the weight of his cannon or batteringram, and the number and strength of his armed retainers, until the church, to prevent all peace from taking its flight from among the peoples who professed to be the followers of the tender gospel of Christ, proclaimed, as I remember it, "The truce of God," in order that there might be one day in the week in which the owners of castles might rest and remain safely at home and the armored knights should not engage in foraging expeditions against their neighbors. Lords built castles, barons and knights buckled on armor, armies were marshaled, and nations bathed in blood and fire in the name of peace.

The war of the Dutch Republic, when the Spanish soldiery invaded the country, was waged by the invaders in the name of the Prince of Peace; so also were all the crusades, which extended over a period of three hundred years and were marked by a spirit of bloodthirstiness never surpassed, launched in the love of God and righteousness, and the children's crusade, the crowning cruelty of all the ages, was the joint product of human ambition and the preaching of righteousness and peace.

We saw that also in modern times in our communities, when it was thought that every citizen should have the right to carry a pistol about his person, and in my State the horseman carried it hung to the horn of his saddle, and the footman carried it swung around his waist, and no man was expected to go about unarmed until the law said that we should disarm all citizens, and peace substantially followed. I want to say that since the time when Constantine the Great, at the head of his army, claimed that he saw the shadow and the sign of the cross in the sky, these claims have been false pretenses, and we should strike the mask from the pretense under which we arm for war while we claim we arm for peace. [Applause.]

themselves like millstones around the industries of the people. In the day of small production the lord carried his feudal subjects with him to the field, while the women worked at home to produce the meager necessities to support life. How they lived at all in those days and supported such vast armies God only knows, but we do know that they lived hard, with half the bare necessities of healthy life supplied and in virtual slavery. And we do know that a Louis XIV in France so multiplied the burdens of his people in order, as he claimed, by the greatness of his power, to make that power feared and to deter the other nations from attacking him or thwarting his plans, that while he filled his land with martial pageantry and wrote glory large for more than a half century of his reign, he wrote shame at the end of it, and for his successors sowed the seeds of a revolution that shook all the nations of the earth. In this advanced age, when production has increased to such an extent that onefifth of our population might support the balance, with improved machinery, we must devise some means by which we can hang this millstone of war expenditure around our people's neck again, and we devise great battle ships, under which, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] has said, we are spending to-day $135,000,000 for a navy, whereas when he came into the House sixteen years ago $20,000,000 was sufficient.

The time will soon come, if the rush of progressive increase is continued, when $250,000,000 will be required annually to keep up this increasingly heavy and heavier burden of the navy. Our Government ought to keep abreast of the times, ought to be continually building some vessels, in order that we may keep posted as to the latest improvements in naval warfare; but we have 6 underway now, and in ten years' time the repairs and changes on the vessels we have in the navy will cost more than it costs to build 4 ships a year to-day. we could have another Roosevelt, and Congress should accede to his requests, at the end of another eight years' term we would perhaps be spending $400,000,000 per annum on the navy alone. If our navy as we have it were placed upon the Pacific Ocean, the only cloud in the sky of peace would be successfully dissipated. In my opinion, the European nations con-template war only with horror, because they are advanced and civilized, and have not the thirst of blood. Possibly the Japanese nation to-day, in its youthful resurrection from a long-sleep of inaction, would lose their balance and plunge into war, though I do not believe it. If that be the case, we are prepared against them without further expenditure, for we have a greater navy than they have themselves,

We must not forget that the building of a navy never ends. It takes three to four years to build a battle ship, and it is not completed before repairs and changes begin. In about ten years it is likely to be unseaworthy or antiquated or supplanted by a more efficient fighting machine. We are feeding the hunger and stimulating the thirst for war and learning to boast and glory in our power, while we are piling high the burden of debt for war in anticipation even as Louis XIV did for war

Mr. Chairman, since 1812 there has been no threat or fear or probability of any foreign invasion of the United States. The Monroe doctrine, the most aggressive and self-assertive policy our Nation ever adopted toward foreign nations, was established with scarce a sea force sufficient to be called a "navy." Our limitless resources are known, and in themselves are stronger to deter any nation from striking us than a far larger navy would be to prevent the striking of any weaker nation. Till now also our national love of justice and peace, known of all men, has been a tower of strength to us among the nations of the earth. May God forbid that we should ever take on the pride of the war lord or become with our navy the swaggering bullies of the sea.

Mr. FINLEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois now use some of his time.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, there seems no one on this side who wishes to speak, except myself, and I claim the right to close the debate.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I will yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, with a navy greater than any in the world except the English navy, and with an enormous deficit in our revenues, I sincerely hope this amendment striking out the authorization for two battle ships will prevail. If it is adopted, it does not necessarily mean we have changed our naval policy, except in respect to the number and size of ships we will authorize this year, for we have no settled policy in this respect. In the very nature of the case we can not have, for in the matter of naval construction each succeeding Congress necessarily determines for itself the number, size, and cost of naval vessels it will authorize. The next Congress, if it sees fit to do so, can provide for two, or as many battle ships as, in its judgment, is necessary and as the revenues of the Government will permit. I want to make it clear that I do not favor the amendment because I am opposed to providing all of the means necessary for our national defense; I favor the amendment because I do not at this time deem it necessary to add to our navy two of the greatest battle ships the world has ever seen, merely to gratify our ambition to excel all other nations in the world in the matter of competitive naval shipbuilding.

For, Mr. Chairman, the country can not escape the conclusion, when it analyzes our situation in respect to our national defense, that there is no real necessity for this very large expenditure of the public money at this time, and that the principal reason for the authorization is an ambition on our to excel other nations in the matter of naval shipbuilding. This is not alone true of ourselves, but is also true of other nations. A year ago, speaking on the naval budget, the prime minister of England, Mr. Asquith, said:

We do not wish to take the lead, but we want to do everything in our power to prevent a new spurt in competitive shipbuilding between the great naval powers.

In my judgment, we should emulate the example of our sister nation, Great Britain, and strive to check this tendency among the naval powers to excel in naval shipbuilding. In reading the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I find that one of the arguments in support of the recommendation for these two large ships—the largest vessels that ever have been built—is that during the past year the policy of building battle ships of large displacement and high speed has been the policy of other nations.

I have always contended, Mr. Chairman, that we are not justified in determining the size of our navy by the size of other navies, but that the size of our navy should be governed by what is necessary for our national defense, taking into consideration our geographical isolation. And yet it is a fact we should not lose sight of in considering this question that we have to-day a navy which in point of efficiency and in tonnage is second only to one, and that is the navy of Great Britain. From the standpoint, then, of gratifying an ambition to equal, if not excel, other nations in the size of our navy we do not need these two enormous battle ships-enormous in size and enormous in cost-for in size and efficiency our navy is larger than that of any other except the English navy.

In the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy, dated November 30, 1908, it appears that-

During the past year the policy of building battle ships of large displacement and high speed, with main battery guns of the largest caliber, has been universally continued, and all navies are now engaged in or have authorized the construction of such vessels.

And no other argument is advanced in support of the recommendation of the Secretary or of the committee.

It matters not, so far as I am concerned, how many naval vessels other nations, not situated as we are, may construct. We should now determine the question whether or not we at this time should authorize the construction of two of the largest vessels that have ever been launched, in addition to those we now have, independent of what other countries may deem necessary for their defense.

Mr. Chairman, there is a good reason, one perhaps sufficient, to justify the increase in the number and size of vessels of some foreign countries, but it is one that does not apply to us. Take, for example, France, England, and Germany; either can strike the other within a few hours and use their home as a base from which to operate. They are independent nations, having diverse and conflicting interests at home and abroad. If there is any menace to their peace, it is this conflict of interest and this close proximity that causes it and makes it necessary for each of these countries to be prepared to meet the other in war at any time. But we are altogether differently situated. In addition to our navy and in addition to our seacoast fortifications, we have that which is worth as much to us as a means of national defense as all the navies of the We have two oceans, on either side of us, giving us a geographical isolation that is of more value to our defense than all the navies we could build. It is this wide ocean expanse on the east and on the west of us that is entirely ignored in urging the need and extension of our navy beyond anything enjoyed by any other nation.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we hear a great deal at this particular time about the possibility of war with Japan. I am getting somewhat tired of these annually recurring wars with Japan. They are always simultaneous with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill in this House. [Laughter and applause.] During every other week and month in the year we are told our relations with Japan are the most friendly and cordial, but when we come to consider the naval appropriation bill the newspapers are filled with predictions of what may happen in the future between the United States and Japan. It is a remarkable coincidence that we never hear of war with any country except when we are considering the provisions of this naval bill. Mr. Chairman, it was only a few days ago that I was told by a gentleman who spent some time in Japan last summer that there is absolutely no more danger of war be-tween Japan and the United States than there is of a war between the United States and Great Britain. Our relations with that country were never more friendly than now.

But that is not the only reason why there is no danger of war with Japan. Would Japan, even if she was able financially, ever think of sending a fleet of battle ships from Yokohama to attack our Pacific coast distant 4,200 miles? Her vessels would have to be supplied somewhere in the Pacific Ocean with coal and other supplies. For this purpose a naval base would be as essential to her success as war ships. A war ship without coal may be a thing of beauty, but it is as harmless as a dove. [Applause.] There is no available place in the Pacific Ocean except Hawaii from which a hostile fleet could operate against our Pacific coast, and when we have fortified the Hawaiian Islands, as they will be when the money now appropriated and being appropriated this year is expended, under the recom-mendations of the Taft Board, the Hawaiian Islands will be as impregnable as Gibraltar, and impossible of being captured by Japan or any other nation.

There is no naval vessel afloat that can sail in time of peace from Yokohama to the Pacific coast and back again with her own coal, a distance of 8,400 miles. Without a naval base in the Pacific no oriental country could send a fleet of naval vessels and accompany that fleet with enough colliers to supply them with the necessary coal. If anyone doubts this let him study the coaling needs of our fleet on its trip around the world and the way those needs were supplied. So I say, Mr. Chairman, from no standpoint are we in any danger of war with Japan or any other oriental country. But we have just recently concluded an agreement with Japan which we were told before the naval bill was brought up for consideration insures the most friendly relations with that country. The country rejoiced over this fact, for our people have always enjoyed and will always endeavor to continue the most peaceful and friendly relations with the people of Japan.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman believe that with all the preparations for defense at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, a successful defense could be made unless we have vessels of equal efficiency to cope with vessels of other countries?

Mr. TAWNEY. In answering the gentleman I will say that that is the judgment of the Taft Board that made recommendations for the fortifications of Hawaii.

Mr. BATES. I am not speaking of the land fortifications, but of the naval preparation by way of modern ships which would be necessary to control the sea, to prevent a successful attack and probable taking of Hawaii and Pearl Harbor by a foreign foe.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the fortifications at Pearl Harbor and at Honolulu, when completed, as recommended by the Taft Board, are not sufficient, are not adequate for the protection of Pearl Harbor and Honolulu, then why have these recommendations been made, and why are we needlessly wasting the public money for the purpose of constructing these fortifications?

Mr. Chairman, on the Atlantic side we are equally secure from effective attack. There is no European country that has a transport service of sufficient capacity to land an army of 100,000 or 150,000 men fully equipped for war on our shore at a given time, even in time of peace.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we are not situated as are the other countries with which we are constantly comparing means of national defense. There is no country that can strike us effectively, with the fortifications we now have and with the navy we now have.

But I am not in favor of the amendment alone because I believe it unnecessary at this time to authorize these two large battle ships. There is another reason-one that ought to appeal to the membership of this House and to the country-against this ambitious policy to excel all other nations in the number and size of our war vessels. We are this year spending 40 per cent of all our revenues, exclusive of postal receipts, for preparation for war and about 30 per cent on account of wars past, leaving only 30 per cent for all other governmental purposes, except the postal service. We to-day have a deficit of over $75,000,000. In other words, we have expended, during the last six months, $75,000,000 more than we have received. At the end of this fiscal year we will have a deficit of at least $125,000,000.

Next year, on the basis of existing revenue laws, according to the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, we will have a deficit of $143,000,000. We have no money to-day for permanent constructive objects like river and harbor improvements; and you propose, in the face of that fact, to appropriate $24,000, 000 for temporary destructive purposes, or for two $12,000,000 battle ships. If we could take the $24,000,000 that will ultimately be placed in these two battle ships and devote that money to river and harbor improvements, that improvement would be permanent and the benefit would be immediate and direct to the people and their commerce. But the people are denied these necessary internal improvements for want of money; and yet, to gratify an ambition to excel all other nations in the matter of shipbuilding, you propose, in the face of a certain deficit of one hundred and twenty-five millions this year and a possible deficit of one hundred and forty-three millions next year, to spend $24,000,000 in the construction of two ships.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, I do not say that the $24,000,000 are carried in this bill. Twelve million dollars of it is, and that is only for the cost of the hull and armor of the two ships.

Mr. FOSS. I want to state to the gentleman that the cost of these ships is $10,250,000 each.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the last session we were told that these Dreadnoughts of 20,000-ton burden would cost $13,000,000. Now, because we have had hard times and are constructing them a little more cheaply, it is estimated that they will cost $12,000,000, and $6,000,000 for each ship is carried in this bill, which is only half of the actual cost of the ships. Therefore we will have $24,000,000 to pay, and nothing but a deficit with which to meet the expenditure. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[By unanimous consent Mr. TAWNEY was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state, for the information of the House, that I have received from the chief constructor of the navy a statement to the effect that the estimated cost of each one of these ships would be $10,250,000—that is to say, the cost for the two ships will be $20,500,000 instead of $24,000,000, as the gentleman from Minnesota has stated in his remarks.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Illinois takes his seat, I would like to ask him a question. I would like to ask if, for the information of the committee and of the House, he would be good enough to state the reasons that determined the committee to report in favor of the construction of two battle ships-whether it was on representation by officers charged with the defense of the country or from ratiocinations pursued by the committee itself?

Mr. FOSS. I will state to the gentleman that there is in the Navy Department a body called the "General Board," composed of some of the ablest officers in the navy, who, every year, give careful consideration to the subject of the naval programme, and this board made a recommendation that we authorize four battle ships this year. We have, in addition to that, the recom-mendation of the Secretary of the Navy to authorize four battle ships, and then upon that comes the recommendation of the President of the United States, in his message sent to Congress, that we authorize four battle ships. Now, all these recommendations came before the committee, and the committee, after careful consideration and discussion, came to the conclusion that it would be wise to recommend half the number, or two battle ships, and accordingly we recommend that number in this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FOSS. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Are we to infer from that that the judgment of the committee is half as wise as that of the board, or twice as wise? [Laughter and applause.]
Mr. FOSS. The gentleman can figure that out for himself.

I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hep-

EURN.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, we always have opposition to every effort that is made to increase the military power of this Government, but I have never heard so trivial a reason or one so dishonoring to the people of the United States assigned to those who desire to increase the military power of the United States as that which was made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] a little while ago. He told us that the sole purpose of those who wanted to have an adequate navy was because of an ambition to excel in naval architecture. He told us, aside from the possibility of war, aside from the solicitude that patriots may have for the performances of their Government in case war does come, he imputes to us simply the ignoble purpose of desiring to build better ships than some other nation. scout that suggestion of the gentleman as an insult to the American people. Those who favor an adequate navy do so because they recognize the fact that the American people are a warlike people. Every generation of Americans has had its war, as probably every generation will.

There is a passion for military glory in the breast of all Americans, and while we talk of ourselves as a Christian people, intent upon securing the spread of peace over all the nations, yet we have had how many wars, Mr. Chairman—1812, 1846, 1861, and 1898. In less than a century this Christian people has had four wars. And, Mr. Chairman, let me call attention to that other fact that in each one of them we went in without being prepared. In the war of 1812 we went in without either army or navy and threw down our challenge to the most powerful nation on earth. The war of 1846 found us without preparation, and preparation had to be made after hostilities began. So it was with the war of 1898. The first thing we did was to appropriate $50,000,000 to bring up our war establishment to the condition that it ought to have been in in time of peace. have always listened to the siren song of those gentlemen who say, "You will never need an army; you will never need a navy;" and how gratifying it must be to all in authority to listen to the assurances of the gentleman from Minnesota that there can be no further wars, that we are to be exempt from all of these curses that come to other nations through national Here is to be peace. And we have the word of the gentleman from Minnesota that no hostile force can reach our shores. Then why be timid? If the good people along the northern Atlantic coast in 1898 had known what he knows there would have been no solicitude when it was rumored that the Spanish fleet was approaching our coast, and the good people of Boston would not have carried all of their portable valuables hundreds of miles into the interior [laughter] if they had only known what the gentleman from Minnesota knows and could only have been so fully established in their ideas of security as is the doughty gentleman from Minnesota. [Laughter.]

Now, if the gentleman had told us that no hostile fleet could have ever reached the capital city of his district, I would have thought possibly he might be correct [laughter], certainly at this season of the year. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, every man knows that if an insult comes to our Government from any foreign government, there will be reparation or war. Why talk about peace when we recognize that fact? The war spirit that is in the hearts, ah, in the blood, of young America would force any administration into hostility. What cause of war other than sentiment had we in 1898? Yet, when the sentiments of the American people were outraged they did not stop. The Government tried to do so, the administration did everything possible, the President held back, but this impulse that is in the hearts and in the blood of Americans, when there was a people alien to us, not of our blood, in whom we had no especial interest, and whom tyranny trampled upon, demanded that we should go to their rescue, without hestitation, without preparation, without a fitting army or a competent navy, we did; and the very first step was to appropriate by a vote that was unanimous, a vote in which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] participated, a vote in which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholof], I think, said "aye," we appropriated $50,000,000, not for the purpose of putting our Nation in that condition that it ought to have been for the purposes of that war, but to bring it up to even the peace standard that was creditable to the Nation.

And, Mr. Chairman, one of the evidences that seems to me to be so important in this matter, that proves the war spirit of the Americans, is found in the fact that the $50,000,000 was put into the hands of the President without limitation, except to expend it to put us as nearly as possible into a war condition; and up to this moment, Mr. Chairman, there has been no request from any human being as to how that $50,000,000 was expended.

Now, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOSS. I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman,

Mr. HEPBURN. Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I believe that now is the time to secure an efficient navy. That our navy is commensurate with our wants, I do not believe. The gentleman from Minnesota tells us, with gravity, that our situation is such that we need less of sea armament than other nations may need; that we have two coasts, the Atlantic and the Pacific, and therefore we do not need the same power upon the sea. I do not look at that fact as the gentle-man from Minnesota does. It seems to me, sir, that this separation of our coasts makes a larger navy more necessary. I think that the fact that we have 3,000 miles upon the Pacific, and a larger number of miles upon the Atlantic and the Gulf, to defend, the two being separated, requiring weeks in order to send relief from one to the other, makes it necessary that we should be prepared for any emergency. That is a source of weakness, not a source of strength. The gentleman says that no naval force from the West or from the Far East can ever reach our Atlantic coast in an efficient condition.

I do not know that, Mr. Chairman, and the gentleman will pardon me if I express some doubt as to whether he knows it. What may be done is still a matter of conjecture, and especially what may be done by the Japanese now or by the Chinese in a score of years from now. I do not want war with any nation. I hope we never may have another declaration of war from our Government, but I want to be prepared for it, and as one of the means for securing answers to the prayers for peace that I put forth I want to see such a navy as will suggest to our proposed assailants that there is peril in the assault. I want him to know that assault can be repelled. I do not want the disgraceful spectacle that has been witnessed time and again, at least on two or three occasions, because in our parsimony, or in our hopes for peace that have always been illusive, we have failed to prepare.

Once, gentlemen may remember, when we were defying Great Britain and seeking war with her, the declaration was made when the only preparation that was indulged in was the building of certain gunboats of about from 20 to 30 tons burden, each armed with a swivel gun, and so disproportioned was armament to hull that when the gun was fired across the side of a vessel it immediately capsized and proceeded to the bottom of the river that it was to defend. [Laughter.] And our whole defense when we went into the war of 1812 was 67 out of 200 gunboats of that character. [Applause].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I firmly believe that if we should adopt the amendment, it will be taken as a declaration to the world that we do not expect and that we do not desire war. I believe that it will contribute to the success of the efforts of the patriotic and intelligent men throughout the world who have dedicated themselves to the honorable work of preserving peace, and who hope and expect that this country will lead in that great work. It is reasonable to expect it, because we are so situated that we need not look upon an assault from any outside government on earth as containing the least element of success should such an assault be made. Our isolation, which really is splendid, added to the resources of the country, makes us absolutely secure.

Mr. Chairman, both Houses of Congress constantly preach economy, and just as persistently practice extravagance. This bill is a striking illustration of the extravagance that has characterized us for a number of years. Briefly, I want to call attention to a few figures, and ask that gentlemen consider them before they cast their vote upon this amendment. Last year, as I recall it, the Committee on Naval Affairs carried through this House a bill that appropriated about $103,000,000. That bill was increased when it reached the other legislative body, until finally the appropriation carried was one hundred and twenty-two million six hundred and sixty-two thousand and odd dollars. The estimates submitted to the committee for this particular bill were in amount $134,393,447.99. The bill exceeds the estimates by a considerable figure, for it carries $135,662,888.25.

Mr. FOSS.

May I interrupt the gentleman right there? DEN. Yes; but, Mr. Chairman, I have only five Mr. SLAYDEN. minutes. I will yield if the gentleman will agree to give me a little time.

Mr. FOSS.

Well, go on. DEN. Mr. Chairman, that committee which is Mr. SLAYDEN. headed by the gentleman from Illinois is unique among the committees of this House. We have a bill brought in by that committee that exceeds the estimates submitted to the committee by the department.

Mr. FOSS. I will give the gentleman further time if he will permit me to interrupt him.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How much time will the gentleman give me? Mr. FOSS. I want to say to him that the department never sent in estimates for the new ships; but in this bill we have appropriated about $15,000,000 for the new ships, and these estimates are not sent in as regular estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that is the reason why.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The bill exceeds the estimate, and that is the point. In the gentleman's argument he undertakes to show that his committee is not controlled by bureau estimates. glad to hear it, but if he is right in his contention I am forced to the conclusion that estimates are persistently made greater than actual requirements, for, notwithstanding he claims to be economical, his appropriations grow so steadily and rapidly that I fear he and his committee will soon bankrupt the Government. I fear that estimates are deliberately made excessive in order to get what the department really wants. They ask for four ships when they want two, and so on.

Mr. Chairman, I think there is nothing more absurd than the alarm that gentlemen feel about the dangers that they suppose menace us from the East.

According to the table prepared by the committee and submitted by them, the entire tonnage of the Japanese Government, built and building, is 440,000 tons, against 770,408 tons, built and building, on the part of the United States, which does not include the two battle ships, the Florida and the Utah. Take these in your estimate, and it will very materially increase the difference in our favor as compared with that of Japan.

Mr. Chairman, the coincidence of the consideration of this bill and these alarms of war, with which year by year our people are frightened, has commanded my attention for some time, and it makes me suspicious of the sincerity of the pleas that are made for the increase of the navy. It has happened when our fleet is in the Pacific Ocean that Germany was the favorite enemy. It happens that when our fleet is upon the Atlantic, Japan is our favorite enemy; and I am forced to believe that if we should send our fleet to the Arctic, then Argentina would be the favorite enemy of these gentlemen, who want to tear down the doors of the Treasury and expend every dollar that can be collected from the people by extravagant and unfair taxation.

Japan has a navy just a little more than half as large as She has just emerged from a war that everybody will admit exhausted her physically and financially. She won every battle in that great struggle, but each victory brought her nearer to exhaustion. Had Russia only persisted a little longer—and no thoughtful student of events doubts that she would have persisted but for internal disorders—a different story in all probability would have been written.

This is no impeachment of the character and courage of the Japanese. The sacrifices they made for their fatherland, their resistless and patrictic enthusiasm, testify to their character, and their courage is proven by their conduct in the greatest battles ever fought.

But courage and enthusiasm alone do not wage wars and win battles. In the long run it is resources that count.

Japan has a population about half as great as ours. people cultivate farms that average in area only 3 or 4 acres. Every member of a Japanese family, from the oldest down to the youngest that can possibly do so, and of both sexes, has to be almost continuously at work to keep from starving. A drought or a flood, a disaster of any sort, seriously affects the whole people. Famine is created in Japan or China or India by conditions that would hardly secure a newspaper paragraph in the United States.

To-day the credit of Japan, the victor, is hardly so good as that of Russia, the defeated. Market quotations of national credit issues tell the tale.

Over against Japan's limited resources and smaller population, her famine conditions and reduced credit, I place our own vast country with its enormous population and resources that are beyond computation and comprehension.

I ask you to look at the quotation of her 4 per cent bonds and compare them with the market value of our 2 per cent bonds. I ask you to be reasonable and practical in your consideration of this absurd war scare.

On our side of the Pacific Ocean Japan has no coal or coaling stations. On all the Pacific coast, from the Isthmus to the State of Washington, there is no coal. We find it only in British Columbia. It is preposterous to think that England would permit her colony to give such aid and comfort to an enemy of the United States as to equip her with a war material like The English are not only our kinsmen, they are also sensible people. They need us in trade, to take the lowest possible view of their probable course of action in such a contingency as gentlemen seem to fear.

If Japan were to send war ships to our shores on a hostile mission they would be helpless when they got here. England alone could be of assistance in that crisis, and common sense tells us she would not take sides against us.

Californians are needlessly alarmed-if they are alarmed, which I doubt.

A distinguished military officer told me the other day that San Francisco was perfectly defended—overdefended were his exact words-against an attack from the sea.

Suppose-and it is a wild and an absurd conjecture-that Japan could land an army. We wouldn't be idle. We could meet it, and I know that we could take care of it, too.

We are gradually erecting a system of coast defenses from Maine to western Texas and from southern California to northern Washington. The Atlantic defenses are nearly, if not quite, complete. The Gulf has not yet been as perfectly fortified as it will be, and that work is now being done. I am willing that it should be abandoned until my Pacific coast brethren have had their nerves quieted. We are not alarmed either for our commerce or our lives.

The truth is, Mr. Chairman, that we are military mad. more than half of our revenues are now devoted to military, naval, and pension expenses. Our schools are training depots for soldiers. Half the students are in uniform. A commission in the army or navy is looked upon as the greatest reward that our young men can seek. It spells ruin for the Republic unless we can reverse the thoughts of our people.

The Declaration of Independence is out of fashion. It was described by one of our uniformed statesmen as a inflammable document." We govern 10,000,000 alien people against their will. A large number of people hope to govern more yet in the West Indies. This expansion, this government of an alien people, is tied up with the military idea. It requires more armies and navies, more commissions, and more promotions, and so it is popular.

If we had not committed the political crime and stupidity of acquiring the Philippines, we would never have heard of war with Japan; and even the most timid will admit that we would have been in no danger if such a war had come under such circumstances.

But Japan wants no war. Her rulers are wise men; they know how such a war would end. They have shown ability of the highest order, and they will never be persuaded that a little success in the Philippines, or even a foray on the Pacific coast of North America, will compensate them for the price they would finally pay.

Another thought I would like for Members to consider before they vote for the big increase in the navy.

These tremendous appropriations, plus the deficit that will be more than $125,000,000 by June 30 of the current year, will indefinitely postpone the river and harbor work that we all want in order that our commerce may be prospered.

Which will you have, deeper harbors and better river navigation, with the cheaper freight rates that they will bring, or more battle ships that we do not need and that will be in the scrap heap in ten years?

I insert with my remarks the document entitled "Thirty Reasons Why Our Navy Should Not Be Enlarged."

Tarbell, President Thwing, of Western Reserve University, President Thompson, of the State University of Ohio, Booker T. Washington, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, President Mary E. Woolley, of Mount Holyoke College, and others.

1. Because we have fought foreign foes—English, Spanish, and Mexican—only six years in the one hundred and twenty-five years since the Revolution. In every foreign war we made the first attack. With less danger from attack than any other nation, we are now spending more for past war and preparation for future war than any other nation in the world.

2. Because our extent of coast line has little relation to danger from attack. The second Hague conference has provided for immunity from bombardment of all unfortified towns and from levying contributions by threat of bombardment. We should be safer still if we reduced fortifications, as one of our delegates to The Hague has said.

3. Because The Hague conference also provided for arbitration of disputes over contractual debts, thereby removing excuse for our keeping a navy to prevent forcible collection of THIRTY REASONS WHY OUR NAVY SHOULD NOT BE ENLARGED.

5. Because there is no danger from China, a peace-loving nation friendly to us. Our return of the indemnity has done more to promote peace with her than anything else could do. According to the testimony of Ambassador Luke Wright, of Hon. John W. Foster, of Secretary Taft, and of over 100 missionaries to Japan, familiar with her language, customs, and politics, there is not the slightest foundation for the violent and frothy talk which is emanating from a few Americans against Japan and is poisoning the minds of millions of our uninformed citizens. Said Ambassador Wright: "The talk of war between this country and Japan is not even respectable nonsense." The 100 missionaries say: "We desire to place on record our profound appreciation of the kind treatment which we experience at the hands of both Government and people; our belief is that the alleged belligerent attitude of the Japanese does not represent the real sentiments of the people. We wish to bear testimony to the sobrlety, sense of international justice, and freedom from aggressive designs exhibited by the great majority of the Japanese people." Nothing could do more to develop the opposite feeling that the baseless assumption and insulting statements published by certain Irresponsible newspapers and military men.

6. Because of an excessive, unhealthy reliance on force in our country in recent years, which calls attention away from the real foes at home to supposititious foreign enemies. Its spirit fills the newspapers with reckless, unfounded suspicions and accusations, distorting historic statements, promotes constant talk about war and preparation for war, of maneuvers, promotions, and technical details, and makes us blind to the real sources of our greatest loss of life and property.

7. Because our three foreign wars since 1781, which lasted only six years, cost in life, all told, in battle nothing comparable with our reckless slaughter by accidents every year in time of peace. The $60,000,000.

8. Because we have lost alone by five, largely preven not dependent, as many nations are. General Sheridan said that no nation on the Continent of Europe had sufficient ships to spare to bring over enough soldiers to carry on one campaign so far from its base of supplies.

11. Because we shall need no navy to protect the Philippines if we but ask the nations to pledge preservation of their autonomy when we grant them their independence. More to the world. The neutralization, which we can further use. The pledge between wantonly break such a sed places is one of the most successful methods of the protection of their protection of their owners. The pledge between the United States and Great Britain to remove battle ships and forts from our Canadian border has since 1817 secured peace at no expense on over 3,000 miles of frontier. Without this pledge we should probably have had war. So long as this line is unguarded we shall never fight Great Britain.

12. Because all the great nations, in one place or another, are securing safety from territorial aggrandizement by pledging territorial inviolability. All the nations on the Baltic and North seas signed treaties in April, 1908, to respect each other's territory on those waters. Turbulent Central America has secured peace by similar methods. It is the method of the future.

13. Because, in spite of our strategic position and the fact that Europe largely depends on us for food, we are spending for defense more than France and only $36,000,000 less than Great Britain, where the secure of the protection of armaments could be bottle enough to the construction of armaments could be before enough to increase our insufficient railroad capacity and as many men could be employed in making rails and engines, of which we have too few to move our crops, as in making armor plate and instruments of destruction.

15. Because the recent arbitration treaties signed with Great Britain, France, Norway, Spain, Portugal, Switzerland, Japan, and Germany minimize the possibility of war with those countries, and we have no fear of set the arbi

it. Said Secretary of State Sherman concerning the Spanish war, "We could have adjusted our difficulties without the loss of blood and treasure." Said Congressman Boutelle, "President McKinley, if Congress had left the matter to him, would have secured everything we wanted in Cuba without the sacrifice of one drop of American or Spanish blood."

19. Because our navy is already so large as to incite other nations to increase theirs. Our naval increase was quoted last year in the French Assembly as an argument for a French increase. This senseless rivalry is driving certain would-be customers of ours toward bankruptey.

Spanish blood."

18. Because our navy is already so large as to incite other nations to increase theirs. Our naval increase was quoted last year in the French Assembly as an argument for a French Increase. This senseless rivally is driving certain would-be customers of ours toward bank. This senseless rivally is driving certain would-be customers of our stoward bank. This senseless rivally is declared to the control of the mercial fraternity we could do more for peace than through intimidation by armaments.

30. Because we have not the faintest ground to suspect there will ever be a war again with England so long as our northern frontier is free from her fortifications; nor with Spain, whose interests hereafter can not cross ours; nor with any of the other nations with whom we have always been at peace, and who could fight us only at a range of thousands of miles from their base of supplies. We are especially secure, as Europe is dependent on us for a large share of her food supply, and the Orient has everything to lose and nothing to gain by attacking us. The "Yellow Peril" is a psychological obsession of a few scaremongers who do not read oriental languages or respect people who have not white skins, but who translate their suspicions into statements which are not facts, and help create the very hostility that would excuse their cry for an increased navy.

January 15, 1909.

JANUARY 15, 1909.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to inquire what time has been consumed on both sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has consumed forty minutes' time and the gentleman from Illinois twenty-one minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not hesitate, Mr. Chairman, to say that I yield to no gentleman upon the floor of this House a greater desire to preserve the peace of our country than I entertain myself. I was glad to hear the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] express the views that he did in regard to his desire to preserve peace.

He knows, as I do, the horrors of war, for we have both experienced it in all its terrors, and he is anxious, as I am, to preserve peace. Yet I believe, Mr. Chairman, in the wise and patriotic policy "That in the time of peace we should prepare for Yet I believe, Mr. Chairman, in the wise and patri-Not a war of oppression, but for defense. I am an advocate of the two battle ships recommended by the Naval Committee, and shall vote against the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina to strike these battle ships from the bill. I find ample justification for thus voting in one interest relating to the increase of cotton consumption in the South. Born and reared in the South, loving all of its traditions, as I do, I am eager to aid to develop the wealth and power that the South holds in its unquestioned monopoly in the great staple-cotton. It is more to the interest of the South to-day and the advancement and welfare of our cotton interests than any other section of the Union, that we should be prepared to defend the contention that we are making to-day for supremacy in trade when our rights or interests are denied or imperiled by anyone.

Who can forget that it was but a few short months since that Japan, with the passive consent of Russia, was preparing to violate one of the most important provisions of the Portsmouth treaty by disregarding the sovereignty of China in Man-Japan sought by the right acquired to build railroads to usurp the authority of China, which meant the "closing of the open door of trade." Who stopped it? It was the protest of Great Britain, with the aid and cooperation of the Government of the United States. Why was it stopped? It was because Japan was threatening "the open door," which the South depends on to enlarge her cotton-cloth trade with China, Japan, and Manchuria. We depend on this China trade because our southern mills manufacture the coarse grade of cotton cloth. Have we forgotten that in the Boxer troubles in China the cotton mills of Georgia and Alabama and other Southern States were to a great extent injured by this disturbance in the decreased product of their mills? Then I say that it is more important, in my judgment—if I am allowed to use that argument in behalf of the advancement of the interests of the South in its great expectations of the cotton trade—to stand by a condition that keeps us prepared to assert our authority when our rights are invaded. I am earnestly for peace.

I do not, Mr. Chairman, advocate this measure to-day in order to put my country even with Great Britain in the number of battle ships, or with Germany or with France or with any other of the great powers of the world, but I advocate it simply on the common-sense grounds that we ought to be prepared, not by any means to be aggressive, but to assert our authority and protect our rights. I am not an alarmist. I see no reason to believe that we are likely to have war with Japan. I am one of that class who believes that Japan is in no manner prepared or willing to go to war with us. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I do not see any war cloud above our horizon. I have an abiding faith in the diplomatic wisdom of our country to avoid war and preserve peace with all the powers of the world. But when I see, Mr. Chairman, the great struggle that we are participating in—that we must take part in—with the great powers of the world for the supremacy of trade and commerce, I realize, as a practical proposition, friction and strife of a most serious character may arise at any time. If we are prepared and ready to assert and defend our rights, the friction and trouble over commercial interests are not so likely to arise. Being ready is a wholesome preventive of war and the strongest maintenance of peace. It is, Mr. Chairman, in the interests of the honor and manhood of our Republic that I am an advocate of a sufficient navy. We all admit that if we ever have war with any nation it will occur on the "high seas."

I am, Mr. Chairman, opposed to what gentlemen denounce as "governmental extravagance," and would vote to curtail expenses when I can consistently with the welfare of our country. I do think it a wise policy to build and keep up a good

[The time of Mr. RICHARDSON having expired, he asked unanimous consent for three minutes more.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not control the time. Mr. BUTLER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman the three minutes which have been promised me. He will advocate this proposition more eloquently than I could.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for three minutes more

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is not a spirit of rivalry to equal other nations on my part that actuates me to contend for these battle ships. I care not how many Great Britain has. Strike out the two battle ships, and what condition do you leave us in? Are we thus to abandon the wise policy of gradually enlarging and improving our navy? I have been taught, sir, by a great Alabamian, who was Secretary of the Navy, and who took an immense pride in laying the foundation of an improved navy, that such a policy was wise and patriotic.

Since I have been a Member of Congress I have advocated the improvement of our navy by a fixed policy of authorizing annually the construction of a certain reasonable number of annually the construction of a certain reasonable number of battle ships until we could fairly say that we were, as a Republic, prepared for any contingency. I did not consider these views chimerical, and I do not now. I know I differ with many of my Democratic colleagues on this side. I am not the victim of "frenzy, hysteria, or mania." I say, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to look at it practically, not influenced by what the President of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were horsested on the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen to the seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen that the leaker of the United States were not seen the leaker of the United States were not seen the leaker of the United States were not seen the leaker of the United States were not seen the leaker of the United States were not seen the leaker of the United States were not seen the leaker of the United States were not seen the States were not seen the leaker of the United States were not see dent of the United States may have said or done, but look at it from a common-sense business view, in the interests of our country, [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Harrison].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I hope this committee will vote for two battle ships. I listened to the argument made last year by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] and this year to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], and I can agree with them only in so far as they believe that no war is imminent. I believe that no war threatens the United States today; but when the gentleman from Missouri proceeds to maintain that the defense of this country rests on what he is pleased to call "the enlightened sentiment of the world" I would tell him that when the time of need comes the defense of the United States rests upon the battle ships and upon the strong right arm of the American people. [Applause.]

The gentleman says that he attended the last congress at The Hague. Well, so did I; and I want to ask the gentleman whether, in pursuance of his belief that the enlightened conscience of the world is sufficient to maintain the rights of a nonmilitary nation; he recalls that the delegates of the "Hermit Kingdom" knocked at the door of that conference, demanding in the name of peace that the delegates should secure to them their threatened independence, which they had held for more than a thousand years, and I will ask the gentleman whether he did not see the doors of that conference shut in their faces?

I will ask the gentleman from Ohio the further question, whether, in pursuance of his stated faith that the peace of the world rests upon the enlightened conscience of mankind, he can not recall that a few years ago the greatest military imperial power of modern times engulfed the independent nation of the Boers in the pursuit of territorial aggrandizement?

Mr. Chairman, in the three minutes allotted to me I have not time to go into this question very deeply, but I advocate the building of these two battle ships as a measure of insurance, because I believe that this is the best way to insure peace; and if war ever does come, I want to be able to feel in my own heart, and I want to be able to tell my family, that while there was time I did my share in maintaining the national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, this side has consumed more time than the other. We only have two additional speeches, and I would like to have gentlemen use some time on that side. Mr. FOSS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment offered striking out the battle ships from the naval programme this year will be voted down. I believe in standing by the President of the United States and the General Naval Board, of which Admiral Dewey is chairman; also the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy and the unanimous recommendation of the House Committee on Naval Affairs. They all ask us to vote for at least two new ships. I believe it is the duty of this Amer-ican Congress to continue the navy of this country in its present state of efficiency, and if I make no other point in the few moments allotted to me, I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that a vote for this amendment to strike the battle ships out of the naval programme is a vote in favor of going backward, and in favor of actually losing ground. I do not believe that the American people who send us here desire that the navy shall retrograde and fall below the present state of efficiency in which we have placed it in the last ten years. We will go back on our splendid record of the last decade if we vote for this amendment striking the two battle ships out of the naval programme. In 1892, 1893, and 1894 authorization was made for the building of certain ships of war. They were the Indiana, the Massachusetts, the Oregon, the Brooklyn, the Iowa, and the Minnesota. Within a few years more these ships were equipped and delivered, and within two or three years more events occurred in this nation which made those names household words.

When these ships were authorized, when their keels were laid, when they were delivered to the country there was no more thought and no more danger of war than there is this minute, and it is not with the idea of the danger of war that the Naval Committee brings in the report authorizing the building of two battle ships this year. It is to be in consonance, in harmony with the naval programme which we have followed for the last ten years. These battle ships and cruisers, whose names I have called, are to-day obsolete and practically relegated to the ships of the second class. Not to build and not to authorize the building of two or three or four battle ships each year is a vote of retrogression, because the life of an ordinary cruiser or battle ship is only fifteen or eighteen years.

The gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Missouri talk of peace. I am a member of that same Interparliamentary Peace Conference that has met from year to year and to which they refer.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BATES. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it understood that ships authorized as recently as 1892, and perhaps built a little later, are now worth-

Mr. BATES. They are practically obsolete to-day. Mr. MADDEN. What foundation has the gentleman for making such a statement?

Mr. BATES. Just the fact; and if the gentleman desires to look it up, he can do so. It is the statement of the Secretaries of the Navy for the past ten years. I am as much in favor of peace as the gentlemen who cry peace on this floor, but I want to ask those apostles of peace-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman. Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, what nation prevails most in crying peace, the efficient nation prepared for war or the weak, pusillanimous nation without any navy or army or any strength whatever before the nations of the world? Who was it who made immortal the words "Let us have peace?" Was it a weak, pusillanimous general who was loafing about Washington displaying his epaulets? No; it was a man who was the greatest commander this earth has ever seen, who had been a thunderbolt in war and who had led his legions victorious in every battle, and when he said, "Let us have peace," those words struck home and rang all around the world; and so with this Nation, if she is strong, if she is efficient, if she commands the best navy on the globe, when she utters the words, "Let us have peace," those words will prevail in every portion of the [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BATES. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Who is the more worthy citizen, the man with the revolver in his pocket or the other who goes unarmed?

Mr. BATES. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri that we always equip our policemen with weapons to be used in case of necessity, and such officers are always most efficient in compelling and maintaining peace. Not that they often use them, but the knowledge that they have arms makes their presence a sign of peace and tranquillity, never a sign of disturbance.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But I am talking about citizens. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes].

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time for the purpose of stating my position in regard to this amendment, and my position with regard to the proposition to authorize two battle ships this year. I would be as willing as any man to curtail the naval expenditures if this Nation of ours was in the position it was some years ago, and which the fathers of the Nation fondly hoped and advised it would continue to be, but, in my judgment, the two battle ships carried in this appropriation bill are the natural corollary of the action of this Government in taking possession of the Philippine Islands. I believe that we made a gigantic mistake when we carried the frontiers of our country thousands of miles into the ocean. am in favor now of getting rid of the Philippine Islands.

I am not in favor exactly of the policy which has been de-nominated by the term "scuttling," because I do not believe that method would be effectual. I do not think you could hore a hole in the Philippine Islands and cause them to sink into the sea, because I believe that if it was possible to do that it would have been done long ago. I believe that we must leave to the party which gave us this incubus, which hung this millstone around our necks, and which makes it necessary for us to constantly appropriate great sums of money, the task of getting us out of the Philippine Islands with honor, even though it be at a great cost in blood and treasure. I can see that, having possession of the Philippine Islands, we are open to possible humiliation. Any nation wishing to engage in war with us, in my judgment, would naturally attack the Philippine Islands. They would obtain a footing there and they would intrench themselves and then we would be called upon to ship soldiers and to send our fleet to regain that which was of little or no advantage to us, but which became immensely important before we could ask our people to let us enter upon negotiations for a treaty of peace. He would be a brave man, indeed, who would urge negotiation of a treaty with the Philippine Islands in the possession of some power that had gone to war with us. So I believe that so long as we retain the Philippine Islands we must depend upon the navy to protect the national honor there and to prevent us from humiliation in that quarter. Consequently it is with confidence that I can go before my people to justify my act in voting for these two ships. [Applause.]

[Mr. BURTON of Ohio addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, with almost everything which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] has said by way of argument I am in hearty accord. For the oratorical embellishments of his speech I have unstinted admiration. From the conclusion he has reached my dissent is radical and profound. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burrox] both seem to labor under the impression that it rests with this country to decide for itself whether there be a necessity for increasing its armament. In this I think both are radically mistaken, and from that fundamental, original misconception they have reached a conclusion which, I submit to this body, it would be very dangerous for us to adopt.

Mr. Chairman, I am far from concurring with the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Herburn] that every generation must necessarily have its war. I believe that there is a prospect, and a steadily improving prospect, of peace throughout the world. I believe that as we have seen such progress during the last century that to-day men are moving about the highways in civilized communities without swords at their sides or arms in their hands, so we may hope to see the nations realize before the close of this century that war and preparations for war are a useless and senseless waste of treasure and of energy. But even in the most highly civilized communities in this civilization of ours we are still compelled to maintain jails and scaffolds, criminal courts and peace officers to restrain some men from invading the rights of others. And the nations have not yet reached the point, I am sorry to say, where they can find it safe to put away their arms or disband their armies and trust for the maintenance of peace to the merit of their policy or the excellence of their intentions.

Mr. Chairman, while I believe it would be unsafe to hold that war is an impossible contingency I am happy to say the tendency of events everywhere is toward conditions which make for peace throughout the world. The circle of regard for justice, among nations as among individuals, is widening every day. With the gentleman from Ohio I do not believe there is a possibility that war can ever be made upon this country through the deliberately aggressive act of any foreign government. I am sure this Government will never undertake to make war on any other country. If war is to come, it will be not through the policy or disposition of this Government or any other to make it, but in spite of all that every government can do to avert it. I do not believe there is the slightest possibility of war between this and any Christian country. And I hold this belief. not because of the common civilization that all Christian nations maintain, but by reason of necessities that bind them all to this country in a common interest of vital importance.

Were we at war to-morrow with any European power, and if that power succeeded in closing our ports, to say nothing of menacing the security of our cities, the stream of food supplies essential to the very existence of every other country, would be dammed up, and every neutral power would find itself forced by imperious necessity to interfere for the purpose of liberating that stream of supplies, of which this bountiful soil of ours is an exhaustless fountain when cultivated by the matchless productive energies of our people. And so, Mr. Chairman, I dismiss utterly and completely the possibility of attack on our Atlantic coast line from any source. But on the Pacific I discern a danger, and a serious one, which we can not afford to disregard. The gentleman from Ohio has himself described conditions that establish beyond all question the existence of a peril against which, it seems to me, we are bound to take precautions in the discharge of our plain duty, not alone toward our own country, but to the civilization of which this country is the depository and the trustee.

The gentleman says there has been a remarkable growth of racial repulsion during the last few years. I do not admit there has been a growth of racial repulsion, because I believe it is impossible for that repulsion either to grow or diminish. It is inirrepressible, unconquerable in all men-sometimes smoldering when races are far apart, leaping into life and activity instantaneously and instinctively the moment they come in contact. Never yet have two races dwelt together peaceably in actual contact, except where one has consented to admit superiority of the other. [Applause.] To this fact all history bears unbroken testimony. Gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, you have had demonstrated by experience-ample, recent, and bitter-the truth of this proposition in the South. Within a few years an attempt was made by constitutional provision to establish two races on conditions politically equal in your own States. What was the result? One race immediately asserted its superiority over the other. No power could prevent that assertion or withstand its success. Every resource this great Government could exercise was invoked, and all of them proved unable to establish equality between these two races. Your state governments were in the possession of the race which you consider inferior.

The National Government, with its army, its Congress, by overwhelming votes of both Houses, exhausted all the powers of civilized society in an effort to maintain the inferior race in possession of the governments they had seized, and all the efforts of both governments, state and national, failed absolutely. [Applause.] While the attempts to maintain equality continued, nothing but confusion and disturbance resulted. [Renewed applause.] The two races to-day dwell together in peace with each other, and there is every prospect of peace throughout the future, because the condition of contact between them now is that one race, in act if not in word, acknowledges inferiority.

But there are on the Pacific coast to-day two distinct races, one of which will not acknowledge inferiority, and the other will not acknowledge equality. One has held the soil for many years. The other has but recently appeared on it. This last race has grown greatly during the last few years, not only in numbers, but in possessions. Everybody concedes that if this growth should continue nothing can prevent our fellow-citizens on the Pacific coast from taking measures to exclude all members of this alien race. Whether this determination be com-mendable or otherwise is not worth discussing. It is inex-orable. The President of the United States is now negotiating to secure their exclusion by voluntary cooperation of the Japanese Government. Whether his efforts will prevail or not we do not know. There is, however, one fact of great significance which we can not escape. The Japanese Government will not consent to a treaty providing for exclusion. If therefore the measures taken by their own Government to prevent Japanese coolies from coming here should not prove effective, then nothing will be left but passage by Congress of an exclusion act. Such an act would be demanded by a public sentiment so overwhelming that it could not be resented. Everyone knows that passage by the country of an exclusion law would be considered an act of unfriendliness by the Japanese Government. Diplomatic relations with us would very likely, almost certainly, be broken Will any gentleman here question that fact? Gentlemen know what followed in another part of the world when that same Government broke off diplomatic relations with a great European power. But, Mr. Chairman, even under such condi-tions, I do not believe the Japanese Government would make war upon us.

So far as that Government is concerned I believe it would confine its manifestation of resentment or displeasure to a mere suspension of diplomatic intercourse.

If war should come, I repeat, it will come not through the desire of either Government to make it but in spite of everything both Governments can do to prevent it.

And I can conceive circumstances under which both Governments would be powerless to avert war. Suppose that racial antipathy, which is unconquerable, should, under the stress of some sudden excitement, take the form in California which it actually took in New Orleans a few years ago. Suppose that for some reason or other there was an outburst of racial hostility, in the course of which a number of Japanese were lynched on the Pacific coast. Do you think the Japanese in Tokyo or Nagasaki would allow it to pass without reprisal? If you do, you have never visited that country. Their pride of race is even more intense than ours. We have other passionate attachments besides our patriotic impulses.

With us love of family, love of children, love of parents, love of friends are strong as love of country. The Japanese appear to have but one absorbing passion, and that is love of country; one universal impulse, and that is pride of race. Let that be outraged and reprisals would follow inevitably as night the day. What form would they take? That question is not difficult to answer. In this country if any Japanese were lynched they would be laborers. There are no American laborers that could be lynched in Japan. In that country there are American merchants, American missionaries, American tourists, American officials. Picture to yourselves a contingency that is entirely -conceive not a condition which is unprecedented or wildly improbable, but the recurrence of a condition which has already happened. Suppose that, as a number of Italians were lynched in New Orleans some years ago, a number of Japanese should be similarly done to death in California or Oregon, and that the lynching of these Japanese laborers were followed by lynching of Americans belonging to a superior class in Tokyo. Do you believe it would be possible to prevent an ebullition of feeling in this country that would hurry us irresistibly into hostilities? Would you gentlemen who propose to vote against this measure of precaution now, if an American consul were lynched in Tokyo, or a number of American missionaries were massacred in some other part of Japan—even under the provocation of prior lynchings by Americans—would you come in here to counsel peace and submission? It would be excellent counsel, but it would fall upon deaf ears.

There is but one way to make peace secure against resentments provoked by acts of violence perpetrated in either country on citizens of the other, and that is by making the force at the disposal of one so decisively preponderant that the hopelessness of attacking it or its citizens will be obvious and unmistakable.

I would not be understood as defending, excusing, or palliating acts of violence by citizens of this country or any other. I am merely describing conditions which I believe to be actual, and urging measures to avert dangers which I believe to be serious and portentous.

Now, sir, Î know it is suggested that even if these two battle ships are voted, they can not be constructed in time to meet an immediate emergency. But, sir, the necessity for building them remains. One difficulty with this peril is that it is continuous. Our precautions must therefore be continuous. This peril can not be averted by negotiations begun or terminated in a year. It will last until all, practically, members of that race whose advent has provoked it shall have disappeared from our shores, and there is no prospect of their speedy disappearance. Even the negotiations undertaken by the President aim at gradual, not at immediate, exclusion. [Applause.]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois how many more speakers he has on his side? Mr. FOSS. I think only one more.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cockran], and I feel compelled to say in reply that he is extravagant in suppositions. Peace and war in this day are not made as they were generations and centuries ago. Today they are made in the counting houses of New York, London, Berlin, and Paris. What informed man in this country does not know that the peace of Portsmouth would not have been made had Japan been able to procure the sinews of war? It is a fact that she was compelled to accede to peace with Russia because she had exhausted her resources.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man, I hope, in patriotism and love of country. I do not speak as a southern man at all. I speak as an American citizen. And no one will go further than I to uphold the honor and the glory of this country; but I do not believe that it is necessary at this time to authorize the building of two additional battle ships, at a cost of $25,000,000. And why? To-day we have six battle ships building.

I may say, not in a spirit of unfriendly criticism, that it takes entirely too long to build a battle ship in this country—nearly or quite three and one-half years. In other countries one-half of this time is sufficient. Take the strength of the United States Navy to-day, and, practically speaking, it is second to the naval strength of England. Another consideration, Mr. Chairman: In ten years a battle ship is obsolete and out of date. The battle ship Oregon of ten years ago is to-day practically worthless as an engine of destruction. Yes, the building of battle ships by this country more than we have is unnecessary. Battle ships are for aggression. I believe that the provisions in this bill for torpedo boats, torpedo-boat destroyers, and so on, engines for defense, should be the policy for us to pursue at this time. It has been said that we must prepare for war.

What nation would send its fleet to the coast of America? Would they not be met at the entrance of every harbor in this country by submarine and torpedo boats, and would not their ships be destroyed? And if worst came to worst, we would send for the Wright brothers to come home. The time has come when navigation of the air is in order.

I believe that voting out the provision in this bill for the construction of two more battle ships by the United States Government will make for the peace so much sought after by The Hague peace conference. When that conference meets again, it Hague peace conference. When that conference meets again, it will not be met with the universal cry, truthfully made before, that while the nations of the world are crying peace they are preparing for war, each and every one of them all that it is able.

So, Mr. Chairman, the construction of two battle ships not being necessary now on the ground of public policy or necessity, I have offered the amendment in good faith; and I will say that in the ten years I have been in Congress I have believed in submarines and torpedo boats and engines of defense, and this country is equipped to-day. I do not believe that any enemy could come here, or if they did come, would remain very long with a flag hostile to us floating over them. [A extending my remarks I will insert the following: [Applause.] In country is equilped to-day. I do not believe that any enemy could come here, or if they did come, would remain very long with a flag hostile to us floating over them. [Applause.] In extending my remarks I will insert the following:

The following statement of reasons who our nary should not be enlarged is issued with the indorsement of a large body of the leading mended of the state of the leading mended of the lea

9. Because we have increased our expenditure for defense 200 times during a period when our population has increased only 22 times, our coast line perhaps 3 times, and our danger from attack not at all.

10. Because we are protected by nature as is no other country and have not the excuse for a great navy which England has nor for a strong army which Germany has. Our wealth is as great a protection as our geographical position. We supply our own necessities and are not dependent, as many of the period of the period

French Assembly as an argument for a French increase. French Assembly as an argument for a French increase of ours toward bankruptcy.

20. Because increase of our navy does not increase respect of foreigners for us. Respect can be given only to moral qualities. Our indifference to lawlessness and our civic corruption are well known abroad. We have no more moral influence than we had thirty years ago, when every monarchy in Europe was being sapped by our democracy. Plutocracy and militarism make us talked of and dreaded, but not respected. Many, perhaps, are glad that we are being hampered in our race for commercial supremacy by saddling ourselves with the Old World's military bardens.

21. Because our dignity no more depends on battle ships than upon light-houses or fire engines. We should feel pride if we are safe enough to dispense with a few. A European city built of stone rejoices that it does not need our costly fire apparatus. A large navy is a confession of conscious weakness or timidity.

22. Because increase of the navy is an implication that new dangers are in sight and old friends are to be suspected. It arouses rivalry and irritation with other nations. The two nations to-day who are the most armed are in the most danger of fighting. Just as Germany's and England's increase of naval power mutually irritates each other, so Japan's military skill has stirred the emulation of our jingoes, masking themselves under the conceited plea that we are par excellence the peaceful people of the world and can do no wrong with our navy.

23. Because "a decent respect for the opinion of mankind" ought to be more and more the controlling motive of nations as of individuals. A navy is but a small element in our defense even from foreign foes, to say nothing of defense from our far greater domestic dangers to life and property. We have been secure from attack with our fleet at the antipodes.

24. Because the demand for it comes chiefly from those who ignore

24. Because the demand for it comes chiefly from those who ignore the new substitutes for war and whose military training fits them only to kill enemies, but not to prevent friends becoming enemies. They understand explosives, but not human nature or politics or diplomacy or the methods which have produced the astounding bloodless revolution in Turkey; or the demand comes from the class which supplies implements of war and surreptitiously keeps up war scares which the guilible voters make profitable to them.

25. Because declaration of nonintercourse embodied in treaties is a feasible and far more powerful force. We would better spend our energy in studying this new agent, advocated by Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, and other able men, now made possible by modern conditions of communication and politics. If one tithe of the $60,000,000 asked for were spent on an educational campaign for a pledge of non-intercourse from England, France, and the United States against any nation which attacked one of them and refused to arbitrate, it would do more to keep the world's peace than all their navies. Were two of these strong nations previously to make public their signed agreements to withdraw diplomats and stop commerce upon wanton attack on the third power, no nation would ever attack the third. The declaration would suffice. This is a totally different thing from the old-fashioned embargo declared by one nation on another after war began. Even the unorganized Chinese boycotts, not backed by the Chinese Government, made us remove injustices and more recently coerced Japan. If in fifteen years 400,000,000 organized Chinese refuse to buy goods if they are ill treated, the greatest navies will avail nothing to get their markets.

26. Because new inventions in all probability will make existing

26. Because new inventions in all probability will make existing armaments useless before Japan, even if she wanted to attack us, could recuperate from her financial drain sufficiently to do so. Airships may make battle ships useless.

make battle ships useless.

27. Because an increase of the navy argues infidelity to the great achievements of The Hague conventions. It is childishly inconsistent to create more force when better methods are being substituted for it.

28. Because every enlargement of the navy draws men from constructive work. It keeps them always on the outlook for the trouble which alone could give then the sense of being of real service and importance and getting promotions and honors. Advocates of large navies are notably skeptical about other methods than force for promoting peace and draw the attention of the public away from the quiet and effective to the old-fashioned methods which tickle eye and ear with noisy and spectacular effects.

29. Because by lowering excessive tariffs and thus promoting commercial fraternity we could do more for peace than through intimidation by armaments.

mercial fraternity we could do more for peace than through intimidation by annaments.

30. Because we have not the faintest ground to suspect there will ever be a war again with England so long as our northern frontier is free from her fortifications; nor with Spain, whose interests hereafter can not cross ours; nor with any of the other nations with whom we have always been at peace and who could fight us only at a range of thousands of miles from their base of supplies. We are especially secure, as Europe is dependent on us for a large share of her food supply, and the Orient has everything to lose and nothing to gain by attacking us. The "yellow peril" is a psychological obsession of a few scaremongers * * that would excuse their cry for an increased navy.

In the property of the prop JANUARY 15: 1909.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, the question before the House is this: The gentleman moves to strike out the authorization of two battle ships recommended by the committee to this House, and if this is stricken out there will be no battle ships authorized this year. I wish to say to this committee that the Naval Committee in its recommendation was not moved by any war scare. It did not believe that we would have war with any country, but it has recommended two battle ships instead of four battle ships, as recommended by the general board and the Secretary of the Navy, and also the President of the United States, in consideration of the fact that we believe that the people of this country were in favor of maintaining our navy on an efficient basis; and in order to keep our navy up to the standard of efficiency such as we have to-day it would be necessary for us to authorize two ships.

Another thing, the programme which was presented to the Naval Committee by the Secretary of the Navy would have cost in the neighborhood of $70,000,000, but this programme recommended by the Naval Committee will cost only about $27,000,000, less than one-half. From these facts you will see that our committee, in its recommendation, has been reasonably fair and sensible, and not moved by any of the mysterious sentiment floating about that we are on the verge of war.

I sympathize with a great deal that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] has said. I would like to see that bright dream of Tennyson's realized-

When the war drums shall beat no longer, And the battle flags shall be furled.

But we have not reached that stage of perfection yet; we have not reached that stage of perfect liberty yet; we have not reached that stage of enlightenment wherein the gentleman of Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] has said the greatest defense of the country will be the enlightenment of mankind. We must legislate here as we find people are, and not as we hope they will be some day. We must legislate as nations are and as nations exist to-day, and not as they may be in the far-off future.

Mankind has been a groper all the way along the pathway of human liberty, trying to reach the highest stage of perfection. But it behooves us, as practical legislators, to-day to view nations and people as we find them, and to legislate on that basis.

Now, we have, as a Nation, great interests which need pro-We have interests upon this hemisphere; we have not only the defense of our own coast line, but the defense of the great canal which we are building, and we have also the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine to uphold. We have also interests upon the other hemisphere which we are bound, as a Nation, to protect and defend. We hold the Philippine Islands, and yet it was only a few years ago when the distinguished Admiral of our Navy, appearing before the Naval Committee, said that we could not hold those islands for six weeks if it were not for the American Navy.

So I say to you here and now, in view of these facts, if we have these mighty interests to protect and defend, it behooves this committee to vote for at least two battle ships in order to keep and maintain our navy up to the splendid high state of efficiency which it enjoys to-day, and I trust, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina will be voted down. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this paragraph has expired.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment by way of a substitute, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by substituting:

"One first-class battle ship, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $6,000,000, similar in all essential characteristics to the battle ships in the act making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I suppose, from a parliamentary standpoint that amendment is in order, although there may be some question in regard to that. Really the present amendment should be voted upon first, and then, if the gentleman desires to present that as a substitute, he can do so. I trust he will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think the substitute is in order

Mr. MACON. The substitute, as I understand it, is in order ow. We have been told many times upon this floor that legislation was a matter of compromise

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

Mr. MACON. And this seems to be a compromise between two battle ships and none.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] offered an amendment to strike out all of the paragraph under consideration after certain words named in the paragraph. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] offers an amendment as stated by him by way of substitute, which amendment, however, is designed to perfect the paragraph in the bill. Under the well-recognized principles of parliamentary law a motion to protect the text of the bill is to be voted upon before the motion to strike out. The question is, therefore, on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

There was no objection, and the amendment was again reported by the Clerk.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FINLEY) there were—ayes 80, noes 160.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 59, line 7, strike out "two" and insert "one;" also substitute "ship" for "ships;" also, in line 9, strike out the word "each."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, against that amendment I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. The point of order is this: That on this proposition, as near as I can hear the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, the committee has already passed in voting upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be that the amendment is in effect the same, but the amendment in form is different, and it is not for the Chair, the Chair thinks, to determine the effect of the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Without objection, on the request of Mr. Cockban, the amendment was again repeated.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Burron of Ohio) there were-ayes 108, noes 174.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. Burton of Ohio and Mr. Foss.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 108, noes 158.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Five torpedo-boat destroyers, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $800,000 each.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, strike out all of lines 13, 14, and 15.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I have read a great deal about torpedo-boat destroyers, but I have never yet read or heard of any useful thing that they have done in connection with any of the naval contests of the world. I believe that the appropriation for two battle ships at this time will satisfy the demands of the people for an increase of the navy. I think it will serve every purpose that could be considered necessary to the perfection of an efficient navy. I do not believe that these torpedoboat destroyers, five in number, are necessary, and I think it therefore an unnecessary expenditure of $800,000 at this time. A few moments ago I offered an amendment providing for the construction of one battle ship instead of two. I did that as a matter of compromise, understanding that all legislation had here is a matter of compromise. I believe that the American people want something done in the way of an appropriation for the further construction or extension of the navy each year. My amendment being voted down, I then voted for the con-struction of two, as recommended by the committee, feeling that the American people demand that something be done in behalf of the increase of the navy. But now that the House has appropriated for two large battle ships, I do not deem it wise to further prosecute the matter at this time by appropriating $800,000 for a lot of torpedo-boat destroyers, which, as stated a while ago, I have failed as yet to hear of ever having accomplished anything great in naval warfare.

Therefore, I hope the amendment will prevail. Nobody is afraid of Japan that I know of in this country, Mr. Chairman. There is no more opportunity for Japan to vanquish the American people, either upon land or upon sea, than there is for an inferior race in the southern clime of this Nation to overcome the proud Caucasian race that dominates it now and will forever do so.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman's proposition is to strike out the five torpedo-boat destroyers recommended by the committee. I want to state that in the recommendation made by the General Board, the Secretary of the Navy, and the President there was recommended ten torpedo-boat destroyers, but the committee have only recommended five in this bill. They are very important craft and are used as scouts in attacking a vessel. It is a very serviceable boat, indeed, and inasmuch as we are asking for a few of them, a reasonable number, and in view of the fact we are deficient in these torpedo-boat destroyers, I trust that this committee will vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? Mr. FOSS. Yes.
Mr. MACON. Can the gentleman tell me where a torpedoboat destroyer has ever taken any effective part in a naval engagement?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; in the Japan-Russian war.

Mr. MACON. Oh, that has been exploded. The newspapers said a torpedo boat had something to do with that battle, but afterwards that was exploded in a subsequent report.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase one destroyer whose vitals are located below the normal load water line, such vessel to cost not to exceed $400,000 and to have a speed not less than 22 knots; also two small vessels of similar construction having a speed of not less than 16 knots and to cost not to exceed $22,500 each: Provided, That before any vessel provided for in this paragraph shall be purchased or contracted for a vessel of similar construction shall have been constructed complete and of full size for naval warfare and submitted to the Navy Department for such trial and tests as the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, prescribe, and as the result of such tests be demonstrated to have fulfilled all the reasonable requirements of naval warfare for such a vessel.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. I would like to ascertain from some member of the committee whether there has been any recommendation by the naval board for the construction of destroyers of the type provided for in this section?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. I fail to find any such recommendation in my reading of their report, and I did not know whether there was any outside recommendation.

Mr. FOSS. This was not recommended by the Navy Department, but I think they would like very much to have such a boat

Mr. STAFFORD. On what basis does the chairman of the committee come to such conclusion if they have not recommended it in their report here and there is no recommendation whatever to the committee in writing?

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman will notice the language here. It is that the company build one boat and submit it to certain tests, and in case it comes up to those tests the Navy Department will buy the craft.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has not answered the query propounded to him. Upon whose recommendation has this proposal been included in the bill? He said it is not the recompropounded to him. mendation of the Navy Department, nor is it contained in the recommendations of the naval board. Is it merely an idea of some outsider, or some member of the committee, or upon whose request has this action been taken?

Mr. FOSS. There was a member of the committee who was very desirous that this should go into the bill, I will say to the gentleman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobson].

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can give the gentleman a little light on the proposition. I think it was a year ago that the committee gave a hearing to people interested in the construction of this particular type of torpedo-boat destroyer, and as a result of that hearing the committee incorporated in last year's bill a provision, if my memory serves, for That went out on a point of order. three boats of this type. One member of our committee, who was interested in the proposition last year, was also interested this year, and, if I am correctly informed, it was upon his request that the proviso was again inserted in the bill. It is thought this is a solution of the torpedo-boat destroyer question. If the proposition becomes a law and if the people who build the boat of this type construct one which meets with the requirements of the Navy Department, the Navy Department may then purchase it. If it does not meet the requirements, they are under no obligation to purchase, and the Government is not put to any expense whatever. That is all the light I think any members of our committee can throw on this proposition. The clerk of the committee informs me that it was in evidence that a model of this type of boat had been successfully tested.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I question very much whether, in the existing condition of the government's finances, it is a proper time to launch upon any experimentation in new types of torpedo destroyers. Certainly we should not adopt as a part of the naval bill provisions for untried destroyers without having the recommendation of any person whatsoever connected with the Navy Department. Many of the recommendations of this naval board have been passed over by the committee, such as scout cruisers and other character of fighting force, and I feel compelled under existing circumstances to make the point of order against the paragraph for the reason that it is new legislation and in violation of paragraph 2 of Rule XXI. This same provision was passed upon last year when the matter was under consideration by the committee, and was then ruled out of order. I call the attention of the Chairman to the ruling in a similar matter on page 4828 of the Record of the first session of this Congress.

The Chair sustains the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One fleet collier, of 14 knots trial speed, when carrying not less than 12,500 tons of cargo and bunker coal, to cost not exceeding $1,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I understand it, this section must be considered in connection with the section following, which seeks to alter existing law by—Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recognize it is a separate provision, but in the decision of this question must you not also consider the effect of the following section, whereby you make available the amount of money that was last year provided for two fleet colliers so that you may purchase four?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the recommendation of the naval board, they request three additional fleet colliers, and in this paragraph you make provision for one of those, and in the next paragraph you seek to make provision for the additional two by making applicable the money that was voted last year for two, so as to construct four by reason of the low bids that were offered by private concerns.

Mr. FOSS. This fleet collier that we recommend here has no relation to the other four whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not the committee be somewhat swayed in their determination of this question if they knew the following paragraph would be in order whereby two additional fleet colliers would be provided, whereas this paragraph would provide, in addition, a third one?

Mr. FOSS. I do not think it would operate to change the committee's mind at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask whether the committee does not recommend in effect three additional fleet colliers of the same type that is provided in the paragraph under considera-

Mr. FOSS. The committee recommend one fleet collier, and then it recommends that out of the money authorized last year, and to be authorized for the two fleet colliers which were authorized last year, that that appropriation be used to purchase four colliers by private contract at the same price.

Mr. STAFFORD. So the committee, in effect, recommends the addition to our naval fleet of three fleet colliers

Mr. FOSS. It recommends the addition of two fleet colliers without an additional appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am dismissing entirely the question of the appropriation, for in the determination of the size of our fleet we are not guided entirely by appropriation, but more by the needs of the service, and the naval board has recommended, as I understand the recommendation of the naval board, three fleet colliers. I understand the chairman of the committee to admit now that the committee recommends the addition of three fleet colliers to those already authorized in the present paragraph and that which follows.

Mr. FOSS. There is no dispute on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood at the beginning that the gentleman took issue with that statement. The board recommended three colliers in all, and appropriation in this paragraph is made for one.

Mr. FOSS. Because on the concession of last year there is enough to buy two colliers.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite well acquainted with the argument and the reasons that induced the committee to provide for four colliers in place of two authorized last year, and the committee has recommended three colliers instead of one.

Mr. DAWSON. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin assume that three is too many?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am trying to ascertain whether, if the increase in the next paragraph is stricken out, the committee would not recommend, as it does in fact, three fleet colliers; and if it does, this matter should be taken into consideration on the pending paragraph of whether we should recommend one collier. This paragraph should be taken in consideration with the recommendation following in the next paragraph providing for two additional fleet colliers. I therefore believe that the two are inseparably connected, and I move that the present paragraph be considered in connection with the paragraph which follows.

Mr. FOSS. I hope that will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

I offer an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, line 10, strike out "one million" and insert "nine hundred thousand."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to a very remarkable condition. Last year the committee reported in favor of building two fleet colliers similar in every respect to the one authorized in this paragraph. It placed a limit of cost upon these two fleet colparagraph. It placed a mint of cost does two field that, I assume, upon information furnished to it that the cost of these colliers would be about $1,800,000. When the bill came into the House, the House, in Committee of the Whole, provided that one of these colliers should be built in a government navy-yard, and that provision was finally incorporated into the law. As soon as it was ascertained that one of these vessels would be built by a government navy-yard, the private contractors offered to construct either two or four of these vessels, not at the price, or near the price, fixed in the bill, but for one-half the limit of cost placed upon these vessels by the committee. If it be possible to obtain two of these vessels for $900,000 each, or four of them for $900,000 each, perhaps members of the Naval Committee will explain why they placed a limit of cost upon this particular vessel of $100,000 in excess of what they know they can get a contract?

These patriotic shipbuilding concerns of the United States, cooperating with some well-informed officials in the Navy Department, were willing to build these ships at a cost of about $1,800,000. If they can take this one ship placed for construction at a government yard out of the government yard, they will build four of them for $900,000 apiece. For the additional ship they want an extra $100,000. It seems to me that if they can build four of these ships for $900,000 each, they should build five of them for $900,000 each. If they can build two ships, authorized last session, for $900,000 each, they can build one ship authorized last year, and this particular ship in addition, for $900,000 each. This seems to be a clear invitation to the shipbuilders and to the department to waste-oh, not exactly to waste but to donate $100,000 to some particular concern for doing work for a million dollars, when it has already been dis-closed that it can be had for $900,000. In view of these facts, I hope the committee will adopt this amendment and put a limitation of cost upon this particular vessel of $900,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask whether or not it is a fact that one of these colliers is now being constructed for something like $825,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not the figures. what the bid was, but I understand that these shipbuilding plants are willing to build two for $1,800,000, both authorized last year, and they want to get something additional for the one authorized this year. In view of this showing that they can build for $900,000, it is inconceivable to imagine upon what theory the committee increased the limit of cost, except its extreme solicitude for the poor persons engaged in the business of building ships for the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, because I believe these colliers can be built a great deal cheaper than proposed in this bill. When we had a hearing before the Committee on Merchant Marine, a gentleman who appeared there stated. I think, that they had a contract to build one of these colliers, and that they had taken the contract, if I remember correctly-and I have no desire to misquote the gentleman's statement-for $825,000.

Now, it strikes me that if a private contractor has agreed to build the collier in question for $805,000 (and that was the statement made by the gentleman who represents one of the private shipbuilding concerns in the United States, made before the Merchant Marine Committee), we are paying too much for the construction of these colliers.

Mr. BATES. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

You say we appropriated $1,800,000 last year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; we appropriated $1,500,000 on account of two ships, but the cost limit of each ship was placed at $1,800,000.

Mr. BATES. But we did not spend it, did we?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but it would have been spent if the House had not put in the provision for navy-yard competition that it did.

Mr. TALBOTT. The one being built in the navy-yard cost $800,000 more than the one being built under private contract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In my opinion, the gentleman is mis-

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, written on the 18th of January, in which he says:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 18, 1909.

Washington, January 18, 1909.

Sir: In compliance with your request by telephone to-day, I transmit herewith for your information a copy of the schedule of bids received for the construction by contract of one of the colliers authorized by the naval appropriation act of May 13, 1908, together with a copy of the form of proposal issued by the department and used by the bidders.

Very respectfully,

The bids referred to are as follows.

INSTRUCTIONS TO BIDDERS. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

The foregoing proposal constitutes an obligation that becomes operative on acceptance. Special care should be taken to avoid any informality that might, by rendering the proposal liable to rejection, tend to the disadvantage of both the bidder and the Government.

Each proposal must include the construction of both vessel and machinery, complete in all respects, and must be accompanied by complete plans and specifications covering fully the design submitted, with full description of all special features and statement as to the registration society under the inspection of which the vessel is to be built.

Contract will be made for the vessel, including hull and machinery. Defective proposals will not be considered unless the Secretary of the Navy shall deem it for the interest of the Government to waive the defect.

Each bidder must submit with his proposals a continual contract when the considered contract when the considered contract will be made for the interest of the Government to waive the Navy shall deem it for the interest of the Government to waive the defect.

Each bidder must submit with his proposals a certified check, payable to the order of the Secretary of the Navy, or a bond, with satisfactory surety or sureties. Such check or bond shall be for the sum of $36,000. In case the successful bidder shall fail to enter into contract and furnish the requisite security upon the acceptance of his proposal, the certified check submitted with his bid shall become the property of the United States, or in case bond is given the United States may recover as liquidated damages the sum named in such bond. All checks or bonds of bidders whose proposals shall not be accepted will, on the award of the contract, be returned to them, and the check or bond of the successful bidder will be returned to him when his contract shall have been duly entered into and the requisite security furnished.

Proposals must be made in duplicate and will be received until 12 o'clock noon December 15, 1908.

The right is reserved to reject any or all bids as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the interests of the Government may require.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On that information, does the gentle-man not think $900,000 is an ample limit of cost? Of course, if it is placed at $1,000,000, then it will certainly make bids higher; but the gentleman has read several bids of less than $800,000. Why not keep the limit of cost below $900,000?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. FOSS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the gentleman from New York has made his motion at this particular point, and has given to the committee his words of wisdom regarding the construction of colliers, if not toward cutting down the amount of the appropriation; for it seems certain that if the members of the committee have read last year's bill they must realize that even an authorization by Congress of $1,800,000 has not prevented some shipbuilding plants in this country bidding for the work at less than $900,000. And I might say for the benefit of the gentleman from New York and of the committee that as one member of the committee I have no objection to making this reduction in the amount authorized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not believe the gentleman would LOUDENSLAGER. The suggestion carries weight with it as to the next paragraph, and the question will be put to this House, no doubt, whether its Members are willing to carry out the provisions of the next paragraph, where practically, in substance and effect, if the law of last year is not repealed, we give to some place in this country the benefit of $900,000 on one collier.

Mr. FOSS. Built in a navy-yard.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is a matter that this House should consider well, and I certainly hope that the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will be carried unanimously, because that will be an expression that this House does not want ruthlessly to give away the money of the people of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York as follows: On page 60, line 10, making it $800,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "eight," so that it will read "$800,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Naval Committee, in response to an inquiry, read to the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in which was submitted a list of bids under which it was proposed to construct one, two, three, or four colliers at a price as low as $775,000. In view of the fact that a responsible shipbuilding company is willing to contract to construct these ships at $775,000 each, there is no justification for an appropriation placing the limit at $900,000. If the executive officers of the Government are able to secure bids for the construction of ships as low as $775,000 from reputable, responsible sources, they are in duty bound to accept those bids, and they are also in duty bound to see that the contract is so made as to give the Government ample protection.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Was the bid of $775,000 upon plans made by the Government or upon their own plans?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman who represents the Committee on Naval Affairs on the floor of this House did not take the Committee of the Whole House into his confidence, and so I am not able to answer the question of the gentleman from California. I assume that when the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs rises in his place in response to a question and gives information to the House, that he gives that information in good faith; and when he says that the Government is able to secure bids for the construction of certain ships at a given price, the price is satisfactory to the Government. Whether the plans be made by the Navy Department or whether they be made by the men who make the bids makes no difference whatever if what is proposed to be done is the same in each instance. It is our duty to save every dollar we can to the Treasury of the country.
Mr. DAWSON rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word.

Mr. DAWSON. Is the gentleman in favor of the proposition?
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know whether I am in favor of the proposition or not. I want a little light.

Mr. DAWSON. I am opposed to it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask how much the colliers cost before we began to provide that some of them might be built in the government yards.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was estimated that they might cost $1,800,000, but when we provided that one of them might be built in the government yards, then the Government secured bids of less than $800,000.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that three or four years ago Congress authorized two fleet colliers, the limit of cost being $1,500,000 each, one to be built in a navy-yard and the other by contract. That was the last action of Congress, except that of last year, and, as we know, nothing has been done under that $1,800,000 limitation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why not?

Mr. ROBERTS. I can not tell you why. I apprehend, however, that the colliers authorized last year with the limit of cost at $1,800,000 are colliers of a larger burden and a larger cargo capacity. My recollection is that the Vestal and the Prometheus, the two colliers I referred to a moment ago, carried a cargo of 5,000 tons. The colliers we authorized last year were to carry about 12,000 tons cargo, a much larger ship, and of course the price is somewhat larger in proportion.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I notice, in reading the testimony of Secretary Newberry, he makes the statement that these colliers are 2 knots slower speed, and consequently have considerably less power and are considerably less expensive. I think that must account for the difference in the cost.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, a few years ago we began to create competition by allowing a lot of vessels to be built in government yards and others in private yards. The result was, as shown by the gentleman's statement a few minutes ago, that we are getting bids hundreds of thousands of dollars less than we did three or four years ago, before we began that policy.

Now, gentlemen, you are about to turn back to the old policy by permitting the Secretary of the Navy to build all the ships in private yards. If you are going to abandon the wise policy of letting the Government build some of these ships, as in the case of government ammunition and munitions of war, if you abandon the wise policy you adopted, you certainly ought to put in this bill a limitation that the gentleman from New York has proposed, or something of that kind. You ought to do that, so that the Government, so that the Treasury, when it is distressed, as it is, may not be held up later calling for a deficiency to pay for vessels that cost more than is fair and reasonable. The present policy should be pursued. It has done well, as the facts show. We fought long and hard to get this policy started, and I am opposed to stopping.

I call this history to the attention of the committee, and insist, by way of accentuation, that if this policy which we have pursued so wisely for three or four years be abandoned, a limitation had better be put on to keep from being held up by these private concerns.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I am just as anxious as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], both distinguished members of the Committee on Appropriations, to secure these colliers at as reasonable cost as possible; but one fact ought to be taken into account, and that is the testimony which was submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs, which shows the reason why we are now receiving these exceptionally low bids for the colliers. It was stated before our committee by the Secretary of the himself that, in his judgment, by reason of the present condition in the private shipyards of the United States, these shippards were bidding for this work not simply at cost, but actually below cost. That being so, we ought to take advantage at this time of present conditions; but I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzger-ALD], who has offered the amendment, as well as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has made an amendment thereto, to the fact that if they are to take advantage of the present low prices in private shipyards, an amendment should be offered to the amendment providing that the money be made immediately available, because—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman this question:

Does he know that there are now pending before one of the committees of this House claims by these shipbuilding concerns aggregating nearly $4,000,000 to reimburse them for losses they claim they made by taking contracts at a less price than they should have taken them?

Mr. DAWSON. That is not to the point. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that before the Committee on Naval Affairs Mr. Secretary Newberry testified we could get these low figures now, but he had no assurance that he could obtain these low figures on the 1st day of July, when the money in this bill would be available. The committee did not put in a provision making the money immediately available, because we have witnessed the spectacle in this House of one particular committee opposing and raising points of order with regard to that particular provision. If the gentlemen from that committee are sincere in their desire to save the Government a hundred thousand dollars, then I submit that they should add as a part of their amendment another amendment making the appropriation immediately available, in order that the Secretary of the Navy may take advantage of existing conditions.

the 1st of July that would change the conditions in the shipbuilding plants of this country, so that they will then be in a position where they will not have to seek this work at a specially low price?

I can not tell what conditions may arise, Mr. DAWSON. but in this particular bill we are proposing to purchase four colliers from private yards.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If we get steel on the free list, that will help them, I think.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman seems to be anxious to save what money can be saved.

Mr. DAWSON. Yes; we are in accord on that. Mr. MADDEN. Then there ought not to be any objection to the amendments pending before the House if the gentleman is in favor of economy. Why make the argument that these amendments are embarrassing to the department if it is good business policy to economize, in view of the fact that we already have bids for $775,000 for the construction of each one of these colliers?

Mr. DAWSON. Let me read to the gentleman what the Secretary of the Navy said on that point.

Mr. MADDEN. The point I am referring to is the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as coming from the Secretary of the Navy, to the effect that bids have been made and are now in his possession offering to construct the ships for $775,000 each.

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman wants me to shed light on the subject, he will first have to turn off his own powerful searchlight.

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking for information which the gentleman possesses.

Mr. DAWSON. I was endeavoring to give it to the gentleman. Secretary Newberry, in his testimony before the committee, stated, speaking of those bids to which the chairman has

I am sure that the highest bidders are very close to cost, and I think the others are below cost.

Mr. MADDEN. On what does he base that? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman from Iowa know that the representatives of the concern that has that contract for $805,000 appeared before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries recently and stated that while they had a contract for $505,000, they were going to lose a great amount of money building that collier, and that they took it simply for the purpose of holding their men together.

Mr. DAWSON. I am not a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, but I would state

Mr. MADDEN. That is pleading the baby act. Mr. DAWSON. That the Secretary of the Navy stated substantially the same facts to the Naval Committee.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, was there any objection to the Government letting contracts at the lowest price it could get to a responsible concern?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly not.

Mr. MADDEN. Then why quibble about it.

Mr. DAWSON. If this provision stays in the bill as it is now, without the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York or the gentleman from Illinois, we will get that very thing, because the Secretary of the Navy has ample discretion. It is not to exceed a million dollars, and I have that faith in the executive officers of the Government that they will obtain the lowest contract possible under existing conditions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact the Secretary of the Navy urged the committee to make a limit of cost of these vessels $1,250,000?

Mr. DAWSON. It is. Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I have very little confidence in his discretion.

Mr. DAWSON. And for the reason I have stated, that if the money is not now immediately available, he can not advertise for bids until July 1 next, at which time there might be an entire change of conditions in the shipyards of the country, and the colliers would cost more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If there are shipyards willing to do this work at less, does not the gentleman believe the Secretary is unduly alarmed about what will happen in four or five months from now?

Mr. DAWSON. No; I think not.

Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman is on his feet I want to ask him if he will accept an amendment to his amendment carrying an appropriation of money for this particular item, the money to be made immediately available?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; because that would make my amendment subject to the point of order, and I do not propose to do that.

Mr. DAWSON. I am very much interested to see members of the great Committee on Appropriations put to the test of their sincerity about economy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am putting the test by limiting the cost. Let me ask the gentleman to join me.

Mr. ROBERTS. I want to say a word with regard to the argument made by the gentleman from New York-

Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. ROBERTS. Of me?

Mr. ROBERTS. Of me? Mr. MADDEN. Yes. The gentleman from Iowa stated a moment ago that this prevents the money being made immediately available.

Mr. ROBERTS. That is a remark of Mr. Dawson, probably. Mr. MADDEN. I am going to put the question to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I want to know whether, as a matter of fact, the $3,600,000 appropriated in the succeeding paragraph to the one under consideration was not appropriated last year and is now available?

Mr. ROBERTS. That is the point. It was appropriated last year and it is now available, but has not been all devoted to the It is not available, however, for the new collier, if purpose. that is the purport of the gentleman's question-the collier, the cost of which was sought to be limited by the gentleman's amendment. I want to say just a word about the argument of the gentleman from New York to the effect that private shipbuilders of the country, because we were to build one collier in the navyyard, came in and made proposals of less than half the cost of the collier in the navy-yard for the purpose of defeating that portion of the congressional action of last year. Let me remind the gentleman that that bill of last year provided for two battle ships, with a limitation of cost for hull and machinery on each of $6,000,000, one to be built in a navy-yard and one by private contract. My advice is that the contract has been let, or at least awarded, for a battle ship, hull, and machinery for $4,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know that this is practically the same price that they built a battle ship of 16,000 tons some years ago, a ship of 25 per cent greater displacement, but practically at the same price because of this competition?

Mr. ROBERTS. They are building a bigger battle ship for the same money. Now, why are they doing it? Does the gen-tleman mean to say that the private shipbuilders are throwing off $2,000,000 of possible profit on that battle ship for the sake of driving possible ships out of the navy-yard?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been stated they built at a loss to do that.

Mr. ROBERTS. At a price of $4,000,000, two-thirds of what Congress is willing to pay, that that is done for any such purpose? The fact must be evident to the gentleman and to all the members of this committee who have given the subject any attention that two causes are responsible for the low figures on all classes of government ships here. One is competition among the yards. Never in the history of the country has competition been keener among the private shipyards. Why? Because there is no private work going on in those yards.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because the combination has been broken up

Mr. ROBERTS. These people have been at great expense collecting a large force of experts in their yards. They are hoping for the time to arrive when they will be busy with private work and will not care a snap of their fingers for government work. In order to tide over and keep their organizations intact until those times arrive they are willing to do work at cost or below, so that their organizations will not be scat-

I just want, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the gentlemen a little further to navy-yard work. In the act of April 27, 1904, we provided for two colliers, the limit of cost being $1,250,000 each, both colliers to be built in navy-yards, one in a navy-yard on the Atlantic coast and one on the Pacific coast, In the act of June 29, 1906, two years later, the Congress provided that the limit of cost, exclusive of armor and armament, of each of the two colliers authorized by the act of the Congress just mentioned, be increased to $1,550,000. In two years

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. ROBERTS (continuing). The department came to Congress and asked for $300,000 more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS (continuing). And asked for $300,000 more

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS (continuing). Than they asked for the original building of those ships.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know that the department came in and stated that it had completely changed the plans, that it had increased the size and the power of the boats, and they were not the ships for which the appropriation was contemplated at all?

Mr. ROBERTS. I challenge the accuracy of that statement. Mr. FITZGERALD. The record of the gentleman's committee shows that fact.

Mr. ROBERTS. I challenge that statement. On the first collier we authorized we increased the limit of cost for the reason given by the gentleman, but on the other two we did not. Mr. FITZGERALD. Those were the only two that were authorized.

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman is mistaken about these colliers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I am not.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that we close the debate on this paragraph and the amendment thereto.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], which the Clerk, without objection, will again report.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FOSS. I hope that will be voted down, Mr. Chairman. I call for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question occurs on the amendment of Mr. FOSS. On that I want to make an amendment, if in order, to the effect that the words "to be immediately available" be added.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-GERALD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read, as follows:

After the word "dollars"

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that is not pending. The pending amendment is to strike out "one million" and insert "nine hundred thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] to the fact that his amendment is not an amendment to the one offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FOSS. Will the Clerk read the amendment?
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, line 10, strike out "one million" and insert "nine hundred thousand."

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Division!

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 67, noes 14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to build 4 fleet colliers of 14 knots trial speed when carrying not less than 12,500 tons of cargo and bunker coal in lieu of the 2 fleet colliers having the same characteristics authorized to be built by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909: Provided, That the cost of all 4 colliers shall not exceed the total limit of cost of $3,600,000 authorized in said act for the 2 colliers: And provided further, That all of said colliers, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, may be built by contract.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the proviso to the paragraph, that it changes existing law. call the attention of the Chair to the last appropriation act, which provides that one of the colliers as authorized shall be built at a navy-yard on the Pacific coast; and this amendment clearly attempts to change existing law.

Mr. FOSS. I call for a ruling of the Chair. I concede that it changes the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the current appropriation law provides that one of these vessels shall be built on the Pacific coast. This changes that provision, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the contract for the construction of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all of said vessels the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to materials for said vessels, their engines, bollers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and, subject to the provisions of this act, all said vessels shall be unit in compliance with the terms of said act, and in all their parts shall be of domestic manufacture; and the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make the point of order on that language, "and in all their parts shall be of domestic manufacture, and the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture," as new legislation and therefore subject to the point of order. There is nowhere in the statutes any law providing that domestic armor shall be used in the construction of vessels or in the armor of vessels. A year ago I made this point of order upon the paragraph providing $12,000,000 for armor of domestic manufacture, and the Chair at that time, after a hasty examination, overruled my point of order; but in stating his reasons for the decision, as I now read those reasons, it seems to me he failed to give sufficient basis for the decision, and I call it to the attention of the Chair again and ask for a new ruling. At that time the Chair admitted the point that I made to the effect that previous appropriation bills which appropriated for domestic armor did not thereby enact a law permanently establishing domestic armor as the material.

The Chair, however, ruled that Congress had the right to decide what kind of armor should be used and could provide for blue armor or for red armor, or any particular kind of armor. I admit that to be true. I acknowledge that argument to be correct. But this provision does not state the kind of armor to be used. It merely states where the armor shall be manufactured; and if that is not new legislation, then a provision that the armor should be of foreign manufacture would not be new legislation. Stating that the armor shall be domestic is not stating what kind of armor it is, but merely where it is to be made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, in view of the fact that the armor plate of this country is manufactured practically by one concern only, that competition such as temporarily existed has ceased to be, and in view of the fact that Congress at its extra session, soon to be held, will greatly reduce and possibly entirely abolish the tariff on steel, the Government of the United States, if it is to continue the development of a great navy, should be free to buy its armor in the markets of the world, and a limitation of the sort provided in this appropriation bill, and that has been provided in appropriation bills for the last twenty years, should not be continued. For that reason I have made the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as an additional bit of authority in support of the contention of the gentleman from Nebraska, I call the Chair's attention to the fourth volume of Hinds's Precedents, pages 680 and 681, section 4001, in which

I find this:

4001. A paragraph providing that an appropriation should be expended in the United States, an amendment providing for purchase in the world's markets on the best terms was held in order. On January 23, 1906, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the following paragraph was read:

"THE ISTHMIAN CANAL.

"To continue the construction of the Isthmian Canal, to be expended under the direction of the President in accordance with an act entitled 'An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans,' approved June 28, 1902, as fol-of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, approved June 25, 1852, as 1851 lows:

"'For miscellaneous material purchases in the United States, $1,000,000.'"

Mr. David A. De Armond offered an amendment to the proposition as to the place of purchase, as follows:

"Amend by adding the following: 'Said purchases shall not be confined to the United States, but the things purchased shall be bought upon the best terms the world's markets afford.'"

Mr. James A. Tawney, of Minnesota, made the point of order that the amendment involved legislation.

The Chair having asked if there was any existing law on the subject, and no law being cited, he ruled:

"Unless the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri changes existing law, the Chair will rule the amendment to be in order."

Now, in addition to that, I have had occasion to run down this question, and I have never been able to find any recent legislation compelling armor plate or other similar supplies to be bought in the United States only.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to its ruling last year upon this same subject. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the Chair allow me to read a paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentle-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The great author of this book, Hinds's Parliamentary Precedents of the House, says:

A paragraph providing that an appropriation should be expended in the United States, an amendment providing for purchase in the world's markets on the best terms was held in order.

The CHAIRMAN. What decision does the gentleman refer to:

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Section 4001, Hinds's Precedents of the House of Representatives, page 680, volume 4. The provision in the bill requires this armor to be of "domestic" manufacture, made in the United States, and this decision seems to cover this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the decision before him. The Chair is prepared to rule. In the paragraph of the bill relating to the construction of the vessels occurs the item:

And in all their parts shall be of domestic manufacture; and the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture.

To that language the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCH-COCK] makes the point of order that it is legislation in an appropriation bill, and hence obnoxious to the rules of the House. A year ago there was an item in the naval appropriation bill:

Armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized, $7,000,000.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] made the point of order against the words "of domestic manufacture" on the ground that they were new legislation.

The rulings in reference to items in a naval appropriation bill are somewhat unique, because it has been consistently held for years that without other authorization of Congress by specific legislation it was in order upon the naval appropriation bill to put in items providing for new vessels as carrying on a work or object in progress.

If it is within the power on an appropriation bill to insert the item, it would have the same effect as upon the legislative bill ordinarily of providing a new public building, for instance. In other words, having the authority under the decisions to continue the work of building up the navy as a work or object in progress by inserting in the bill provisions which in ordinary bills would be obnoxious to the rules, the committee has the power to describe the vessel which it is proposed to construct.

Having the power to describe the vessel, the Chair thinks it can say "domestic steel," or "foreign steel," or "red steel," or any other description which it chooses to insert, so long as the ruling prevails that upon this appropriation bill you can describe a work not already authorized by existing law. The Chairman therefore feels compelled, after reexamination, to follow the ruling made by the Chair last year, and accordingly the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before that decision is finally made, desire to distinguish between the reasoning that the Chair makes as descriptive of the steel and this provision which is not descriptive. Steel of domestic manufacture may be exactly like steel of foreign manufacture, both as to texture, as to strength, as to quality, as to process, and as to ingredients. There is absolutely no attempt made to describe this steel which shall be used in the construction of ships, but the only effort

The CHAIRMAN. And yet it is a matter of description, remaining for the committee to determine whether it be a proper method of describing it or whether it be a desirable method of The Chair overrules the point of order. describing it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, line 15, after the word "navy," insert:
"Provided, Contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer that amendment because it was originally incorporated in the naval appropriation bill of 1886. creating the new navy, in connection with the provision for steel of domestic manufacture. For some reason in recent naval appropriation bills there has been no limitation whatever upon the requirement that the steel used shall be of domestic manufacture. There has been no latitude whatever left to the Secretary of the Navy and the naval authorities, in case they were being overcharged for domestic steel, to procure the steel in the markets of the world.

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will look at page 62, under the head of "Armor and armament," he will find that there is substantially that provision already in the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, sir; I think that does not cover this provision; and if it does, there can be no objection to incorporating it here. Mr. FOSS. I

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For four submarine torpedo boats, in an amount not exceeding in the aggregate $2,000,000, and the sum of $3,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward said purpose and for the completion of submarine boats heretofore authorized: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate, and shall build any of the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate, should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, line 21, strike out the word "herein" and insert, after the word "authorized," the words "in this act."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is to remove any doubt as to that proviso being applicable to all the vessels authorized in the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $22,766,823.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 62, after the word "dollars," line 9, insert: "Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be used for the payment or construction of any collier the total cost of which shall exceed $900,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that that is a change of existing law.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This is a limitation to conform to the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that it is a change of existing law. There are some vessels for which this appropriation is made of the character described upon which greater limit of cost is placed. This is in effect to change the limit of cost on these vessels.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, I will say that there is no contract entered into by the Navy Department that this will affect. There has been only one contract entered into, and that one is for $805,000. So this limitation is in no way contrary to any contract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no use of the gentleman trying to hide his purpose. It is to affect one collier authorized to be built in a government yard, where the materials have been contracted for and the limit of cost of which is in excess of $900,000.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does the gentleman say that that is the intention of the gentleman from New Jersey? It affects

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman ought to have thought of that when he reported the bill from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The item in the bill is on account of hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $22,766,823, to which the gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment providing that no part of the above appropriation shall be used for the payment or construction of any collier, the total cost of which shall exceed $900,000. It is quite within the province of the committee or of Congress to appropriate or not to appropriate for colliers heretofore authorized, or to provide that they will not appropriate except under certain limitations. The amendment is a pure limitation on the appropriation carried in the bill, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 63, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized, $12,452,772: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for armor for vessels except upon contracts for such armor when awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest responsible bidders, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 62, line 17, after the word "delivery," insert: "Provided also, That contracts for furnishing said armor in a reasonable time at a reasonable price and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, that was the same amendment which was accepted in regard to steel in the vessels proper, and I suppose it will be acceptable to the chairman.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.
The CHAIRMAN.

The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 16, page 62, insert between the words "responsible" and "bidders" the words "domestic or foreign," so that it will read "to the lowest responsible domestic or foreign bidder."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 62, line 16, after the word "responsible," insert the words "domestic or foreign," so it will read "to the lowest domestic or foreign bidder."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a very serious matter in the commercial world has occurred since we discussed this matter last year. All gentlemen know that the Steel trust, in short, has gobbled up its one competitor on American soil, and yet we come along here and make no effort to try to counteract that monopolistic act. I call that to the attention of the committee. The committee must know that it is an undisputed fact that the Steel trust has not a competitor on American soil, and that armor is purely and simply nothing but steel of the highest quality. You know that foreign countries make armor. You have promised tariff reform, though I shall not discuss that for an instant. Here you make a law to apply for another year, and this amendment covers pure steel armor. You are discussing whether or not you will put steel entirely on the free list, and one or two great authorities, I believe, have said it should be done, because the price of steel in foreign countries would be about equivalent of that in this country even if we had free trade in steel. The effect of this proposition is to give the department the power to accept a foreign bid if it is as responsible and as good as our own home bids. It is a business proposition. Conditions have seriously changed, and the matter is up to the House to see what they will do now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Gaines of Tennessee) there were—ayes 50, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment already adopted, after line 17, on page 62, insert:

"Provided, That the purchases of armor plate shall not be confined to the United States, but may be purchased upon the best terms that the world's markets offer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. Louden-slager and Mr. Gaines of Tennessee.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 55, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of the navy; torpedo boats: On account of submarine torpedo boats, heretofore and herein authorized, $3,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23, page 62-the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk then concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the totals in different parts of the bill so as to conform to the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the totals may be corrected by the Clerk, so that they will conform with the rest of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to return to page 13 for the purpose of considering the amendment still pending on that

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered on page 13.

Insert on page 13, after line 4, the following amendment:
"For badges and ribbons to be distributed by the Secretary of the Navy to officers and men now or formerly of the Volunteer and Regular Navy and Marine Corps who have participated in engagements and campaigns deemed worthy of such commemoration, $2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that I have no objection to the amendment, in fact, that I agree to it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26394, the navy appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote asked on any amendment? If not, the amendments will be voted upon in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and the amendment of the bill.

third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill is passed. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an inquiry. Did the Chair ever put the motion whether the bill should pass or not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated deliberately, and waited for objection, that without objection, the bill would be considered as passed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I want to add an objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia desires to object?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do. The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman seek to object at the

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I did not understand what the Speaker said. I made inquiry with reference to it.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the gentleman from Georgia was paying attention and did not hear, and that in fairness to the gentleman and to the House that the vote should be taken upon the bill.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANDLER. Can a bill be passed simply by the Chair stating that, "without objection, the bill will be considered as passed?"

The SPEAKER. It has been done constantly, be done by the House by unanimous consent. I If it were practically possible to get an elephant in the door, the elephant could be passed through the House. [Laughter.] The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. Foss, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

A bill (H. R. 26606) to authorize the Lewis Bridge Company to con-struct a bridge across the Missouri River.

struct a bridge across the Missouri River.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Lewis Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point on the east side of said river in section 8, township 50 north, range 33 west, in Platte County, Mo., to a point on the west side of said river in section 27, township 10 south, range 25 east, in Wyandotte County, in the State of Kansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment. [After a pause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, after the word "a," strike out the words "railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Booher, a motion to reconsider the vote upon which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TOKYO EXPOSITION.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from further consideration of the bill S. 7992, and that the same may be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (8. 7992) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," approved May 22, 1908.

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," approved May 22, 1908, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that after January 1, 1909, one of the commissioners-general, who now receives $8,000 per annum, appointed under said act shall receive as compensation for his services the sum of $1,000 per annum until the end of the year 1914, which amount shall also include his expenses, and thereafter the sum of $8,000 per annum until the end of the year 1917, and the other two commissioners-general shall receive no compensation for their services until the end of the year 1914, and thereafter shall receive $5,000 each per annum until the end of the year 1917; and so that the secretary and other employees shall receive no compensation for their services until the end of the year 1914, and thereafter the secretary shall receive $5,000 per annum until the end of the year 1917, and that no expenses shall be incurred by the commission or clerical or other assistants employed prior to January 1, 1915.

Also the following committee amendment:

Also the following committee amendment:

Amend by striking out all after the word "after," in line 7, and substituting the following:

"February 1, 1909, the three commissioners-general appointed under said act shall receive no compensation for their services until the end of the year 1914, and thereafter one of the said commissioners-general, who now receives $8,000 per annum, shall receive $8,000 per annum from January 1, 1915, until the end of the year 1917, and the other two commissioners-general shall receive $5,000 each per annum from January 1, 1915, until the end of the year 1917; and so that the secretary and the other employees shall receive no compensation for their services from February 1, 1909, until the end of the year 1914, and the secretary shall receive $5,000 per annum from January 1, 1915, until the end of the year 1917; and so that after February 1, 1909, no expenses in excess of $1,000 per annum shall be incurred by the commission prior to January 1, 1915."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object-The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]?

Mr. DENBY. I do. Mr. PAYNE. As I understand the present law, the salaries

Mr. FATNE. As I understand the present any for these commissioners would commence now?

Mr. DENBY. Would commence January 1, 1909.

Mr. PAYNE. And unless this law is passed postponing it, or some similar law, they would continue to receive the salaries until the exposition was held in 1915?

Mr. DENBY. Certainly, they would, in case they were con-

Mr. DENSI: Certainly, they would, in case they were confirmed by the Senate in their offices.

Mr. PAYNE. They have not yet been confirmed? Then the Treasury has not been mulcted anything for this January? Why would it not be a good idea, seeing that this exposition is postponed for five years, to postpone the whole business and repeal the act, and come in later and provide for it, or provide for the appointment of commissioners later? Some people may grow up in the business in the next five years and therefore would be overlooked now in making the appointments.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, it is regarded by the State Department as inadvisable to discontinue this commission. It is also regarded by the State Department and the President as inadvisable to change the personnel of the commission, because these three gentlemen, acting under instructions from the State Department, have been to Tokyo, are already thoroughly acquainted with the work of the commission, and have accomplished a very great service.

Mr. PAYNE. They have already commenced on the performance of their duties?

Mr. DENBY. They have been to Tokyo, and have saved the United States Government $200,000, at least, by securing from the Japanese Government-

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman's bill is fatal, then, that it does not make an appropriation of half a million dollars; in view of the saving of $200,000, because that would be in accordance with the general precedent.

Mr. DENBY. The commission was paid out of an appropriation of $50,000 made in the original bill, and the Japanese commission is coming to this country, and they must receive some attention.

Mr. PAYNE. This $50,000 has already been absorbed?
Mr. DENBY. Twenty thousand dollars of that is already contracted for under the original bill.

Mr. PAYNE. To pay these gentlemen's expenses and per diem?

Mr. DENBY. To pay their expenses and their salaries. They were an interim appointment.

Mr. PAYNE. Has that been paid up to this time out of the $20,000?

Mr. DENBY. It has been paid-the total expenses of the commission.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman think, then, in view of that, that we ought to try to save the other $30,000 and repeal that part of it?

Mr. DENBY. You can not save this; it is already spentsome $20,000.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman to say that the original bill appropriated $50,000, and that only $20,000 has been paid out?

Mr. DENBY. The saving will occur, because we limit the expenditure to $1,000 a year until the year 1915.

Mr. PAYNE. Then, there is a limit?

Mr. DENBY. There is a limit in this bill-not to exceed $1,000. per annum.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not observe the limit.

Mr. DENBY. It is not to be salaries, but merely expenses; namely, cable charges and other matters of that character.

Mr. PAYNE. I notice some of these gentlemen will serve two or three years. Was that in accordance with the provisions of the original bill?

Mr. DENBY. Yes. The original bill provided for one commissioner for four years, at $8,000, and two commissioners—
Mr. PAYNE. Do you still leave that to run for four years?
Mr. DENBY. That commissioner will only serve three years at $8,000. The bill will effect a saving-

Mr. PAYNE. There is a saving of $8,000 on that, How much for the other two?

Mr. DENBY. The other two were to receive $2,000 each for one year and $3,000 each for three years; and under the proposed amendment they will receive $5,000 for three years only.

A net saving of $4,000 per year is effected there.
Mr. PAYNE. That is an increase of salary.
Mr. DENBY. No; it is the same salary ex Mr. DENBY. No; it is the same salary exactly provided. There is no change in the personnel or salary or method of procedure on the commission. It merely keeps the commission alive, because it is regarded as a commission of a diplomatic nature, that it is exceedingly advisable, and from a practical standpoint it is absolutely essential that it be continued.

Mr. PAYNE. If this will prevent this salary going on, I am much inclined not to object to the bill; but I think it would be much better to postpone the whole business until we get somewhere in the vicinity of the time for holding this exposition, and see by that time whether we can afford any of these frills. If we keep on at the same rate with these expenditures, by the time this exposition is held we will be borrowing money to pay the expenses of the Government. I would like to have that fact brought before the attention of Congress as time passes. I would be much better satisfied to see the law repealed, so that the whole thing can come up when necessary, somewhere about the year 1914. Congress will be here, and the people will know what is being done with the people's money, and how much we are running behind, and whether we are running in debt.

Mr. DENBY. I do not think the commission would be any expense between now and 1915, except the $1,000 per annum, which is absolutely essential. The Japanese commission is traveling the world through, and there are continual expenses for cables, etc. At any time the United States Government may repeal the law. If the commissioners are to be wiped out any time between now and the year 1915, Congress may repeal the law at any time the Treasury demands that course; but until that is done we must keep alive some sort of representation in order to be properly represented at Tokyo in 1917.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DENBY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman in his report refers to the cost under the original bill. They have stricken out practically all the bill and put in a substitute. I suppose the gentleman for the property of the p the bill and put in a substitute. I suppose the gentleman refers to the original law?

Mr. DENBY. I refer to the original law.
Mr. MANN. Is there authority anywhere which will require Congress against its will to appropriate money for this commission while doing no work?

Mr. DENBY. There is nothing in the act that will require any appropriation except to authorize the $1,000 per annum

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the Executive would permit these commissioners to draw salaries for the ensuing years, to 1915, with nothing to do?

Mr. DENBY. Not only would he not permit it, but it is expressly forbidden by the language of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I am not talking about the language of this bill; but as the law is it enables the Executive—
Mr. DENBY. If Congress authorized the Executive to continue the commission, he would be required to do so.

Mr. PAYNE. Suppose we do not pass this law, and these gentlemen are confirmed, and they perform some sort of service. Il Congress refused to appropriate for their salaries, they could bring a claim before the Court of Claims. What defense would the Government of the United States have?

It would have no defense, for before the occa-Mr. MANN. sion suggested by the gentleman had been completed the law would have been repealed. Now, will the gentleman inform us why we should now compel the next administration to accept commissioners for five or six years from now, appointed by the present administration, with nothing to do for the next four

Mr. DENBY. There is something to do, and the commission has consented to do what there shall be to do during that time.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is not very much to do, because you only provide a thousand dollars a year to do it with.

Mr. DENBY. I may say to the gentleman that, of course, if this commission is not acceptable to the next administration, there is no possible question that the next administration will have full power to dispose of this commission and substitute other commissioners at its will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where is the authority to do that?

Mr. MANN. What is the authority which enables the incoming administration to do that?

Mr. DENBY. It can be done by a request for their resignations and the substituting of other appointees.

Mr. MANN. Then, it occurs to me that the proper time to request the resignation of these commissioners, who have not a thing on earth to do for the next four years, is right now.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, is it wise to accept the resignation or to demand the resignation or to legislate out of office the only body that has any special knowledge concerning this subject, when they are willing to serve freely and without pay and to do whatever is required of them, without compensation, for six years? They have been to Tokyo, they know the ground, they have entered into negotiations with the Japanese Government and have been very successful, and they have established that intimate personal relationship which, it seems to me, it is very desirable to retain.

Mr. MANN. No doubt the next President will take that into consideration and will perhaps reappoint these gentlemen who have this intimate knowledge. He will have that power. It seems to me this bill is only a plan—not on the part of the gentleman—to continue in office gentlemen now appointed, where the appointment ought to be left free to the incoming administration, to be made at the proper time.

Mr. DENBY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Before the gentleman

Mr. MANN. The request for unanimous consent has not yet been agreed to.

The SPEAKER. No; the request has not been agreed to.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. DENBY. I yield first to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I want to ask the gentle-man from Michigan whether this bill as drawn does not require the payment of the salary to a particular person?

Mr. DENBY. It does require the payment of such salaries as are provided for to a particular person, because that person, like all other persons connected with the commission, is now in

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. But suppose the person designated to receive the $8,000 salary should be found in the future not to be satisfactory. Is he not entitled, under the wording of this bill, to receive the salary?

Mr. DENBY. No; I do not think there is any question as to

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. If the gentleman will permit me, it seems to me, upon an examination of this language just at this moment, that the Executive would not be permitted to remove the commissioner; or, at least, if he did, the commissioner would still be entitled to the $8,000 provided for here. The language is:

And thereafter one of the said commissioners-general who now receive $8,000 per annum shall receive $8,000 per annum from January 1, 1915, until the end of the year 1917.

Mr. DENBY. Does the gentleman seriously think that the Government could be compelled to continue paying $8,000 to a man not in office under the terms of this act?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. If the gentleman will permit me to answer his question, I do think that if we appropriate money to a particular person, either by name or designation, he can compel the payment of that money, especially since this seems to crowd the compensation for his services all into the last year.

I will say to the gentleman from West Virginia and the House that I have no objection to amending by striking out the words "who now receive $8,000 per annum" in order that there shall be no designation. There is only one in the bill, and if it seems wise to the House not to designate the man, I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I do not know that I could now suggest an amendment, nor do I know that the one suggested by the gentleman from Michigan would accomplish the purpose.

Mr. DENBY. There is but one designation in the bill, which is the one in question.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. DENBY. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. The report says that the bill as amended by the Senate continues the commission as at present constituted. My question is, What will become of the commission if this bill is not passed? Will the commission cease to exist?

Mr. DENBY. The Senate will fail to confirm the commissioners, and the commission will cease to exist.

Mr. DALZELL. Then, I hope the bill will not be passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill is one that ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole House, and I shall have to object to the gentleman's request in the end.

Mr. DENBY. In view of the fact that there is apparent opposition to unanimous consent, I ask now unanimous consent to fix a definite time next week for the consideration of the bill. We are nearing the end of the month of January, and it ought to be passed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would suggest that the gentleman will have to modify that request, so as not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to any request that would deprive the Committee on Rules of their special function. [Laughter.] Mr. DENBY. Does the g

Mr. DENBY. Does the gentleman object to my request? Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill can come up under the rules.

IMPORTATION OF OPIUM.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 24863) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes, and ask that the same may be considered at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanion the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill to which he refers, and consider the same in the House at this The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24863) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That after the 1st day of April, 1909, it shall be unlawful to import into the United States opium in any form or any preparation or derivative thereof: Provided, That opium and preparations and derivatives thereof other than smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking may be imported for medicinal purposes only under regulations which the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to establish regulations which the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to establish.

Sec. 2. That if any person shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States, or assist in so doing, any opium or any preparation or derivative thereof contrary to law or shall receive, conceal, buy, sell, or in any manner facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of such opium or preparation or derivative thereof after importation, knowing the same to have been imported contrary to law, such opium or preparation or derivative thereof shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed, and the offender shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $50, or be imprisoned for any time not exceeding two years, or both. Whenever on trial for a violation of this section the defendant is shown to have or to have had possession of such opium or preparation or derivative thereof, such possession shall be deemed evidence sufficient to authorize conviction unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "and use" in the title, so that the title will read: "To prohibit the importation of opium for other than medicinal purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Reserving the right to object-Mr. PAYNE. I want to reserve the right to object, too.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from New York may go ahead.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question, or make a short statement. Although this bill belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means, I am not disposed to object to it for the reason that it did not go to that committee, and if the bill commended itself to me or to the majority of the members of the committee I should not object to it. When it was first reported it contained a provision that excluded smoking opium, or opium prepared for smoking, from the United States. It also contained the further clause that would enable opium for all other purposes to come into the United States free of duty. It also contained a clause providing that the law was to be carried out by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

When I first saw the bill I raised two objections from a hasty reading of it. In the first place, it put all opium on the free list, from which we get a revenue of about one and a half million dollars. In the second place, it took this one article out of the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department and lodged it in the Agricultural Department to provide rules and regulations. The gentleman has stricken out that part of the bill, and as it is now presented it provides for the prohibition of the importation of opium prepared for smoking into the United States. If I thought, Mr. Speaker, that this bill would prevent the use of a pipe full of opium in the United States, I would still be disposed to give it consideration.

But it will not prevent the use of it. Opium will still come in to be used for other purposes, and there is nothing in the bill, there can be nothing in any effective law passed by Congress, to prevent any person in the United States preparing opium for smoking or using it as smoking material from the opium brought in for other purposes. It can not be done. We would have practically the same consumption of opium for smoking as we have now.

Opium for smoking purposes produces a revenue of over $900,000 a year. That would cut us off from a million dollars of revenue, and we should gain nothing by the operation of the

Now, I know that it is urged that the State Department desires that this bill pass, because there is to be a convention in Hongkong, about the 1st of February, of the powers, who are going to see if they can not stop the use of opium in the Chinese Empire, and this is to be a sort of inducement for the convention to get together, a sort of certificate of good faith on the part of the people in the United States that they do not propose to have opium coming in here prepared for smoking purposes.

I do not believe that a bill of this kind, having no effect upon the use of opium for smoking purposes in the United States, would fool anybody in that international convention. I do not believe that it would have any effect at all on the use of opium here, or upon that convocation when it assembles. I am not willing to give up a revenue of $75,000 a month when it will do no good.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if it is the intention of the gentle-man from New York to object in the end, I object to his making a long speech. He has already exceeded the courtesy that was extended to him.

Mr. PAYNE. I shall object to the bill in the end. If the gentleman wants to make a statement, I am willing.

Mr. MANN. I did not expect the gentleman to make a long

Mr. MANN. I did not expect the gentleman to make a long speech on the bill and then in the end object to it.

Mr. PAYNE. I object, Mr. Speaker. If the gentleman wants to make a statement, however, I will withhold my objection.

Mr. MANN. O, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in batting the air like the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. I do not want to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ISSUING DUPLICATE GOLD CERTIFICATES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3884) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue duplicate gold certificates in lieu of ones lost or destroyed, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any United States gold certificate, made payable to order, issued by the Treasurer of the United States or any assistant treasurer thereof, under the act of March 14, 1900, shall have been lost and shall have been specially indorsed to order or shall have been indorsed, or when any such certificate shall have been destroyed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion and on such conditions as he shall impose, upon satisfactory proof of such loss or destruction, to issue to the holder of such certificate a duplicate thereof: Provided, That the said holder shall first file in the Treasury a bond with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in double the amount of such certificate lost or destroyed, conditioned to indemnify and save harmiess the United States from any claim or loss on account of such lost or destroyed certificate.

With the following amendment:

With the following amendment:

Strike out, beginning with the word "and," in line 6, down to and including the word "indorse," in line 8.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask if there is any limit of time when this thing can be done.

Mr. STERLING. When the duplicate may be issued?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; or how long this bond would

Mr. STERLING. There is no limit in the bill as to the time when it may be done.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How long does this bond run?

Mr. STERLING. The bill does not fix any time which the bond shall run. No doubt, however, it would run indefinitely to secure the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any length of time within which this transaction is to take place? Suppose one of these gold certificates were lost to-day-

Mr. MANN. It applies only to registered certificates, not to ones that we carry around.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any limit to the length of time after it purports to be lost within which this transaction has to take place?

Mr. STERLING. There is not, and I think there should not be any limit of time. I see no reason why there should be any limit.

Mr. MANN. It is just like a bond.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to repeat a remark, if the House will pardon me, which I made here two or three weeks ago. Hereafter I intend to object to every bill called up by unanimous consent, unless the gentleman who has it in charge brings me a copy, of it a long enough time to look over before it is brought up, and I think that is not unreasonable. In this case I will not object.

Mr. MANN. Has this bill been submitted to the Treasury

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is a wonder the gentleman would not incorporate in his report a letter from the Treasury Department.

Mr. STERLING. I have not got any letter. I talked to the Secretary of the Treasury personally about it, and I will say in regard to the history of the bill that the bill was introduced three years ago. It was prepared by the Treasury Department. At that time it passed the House with an amendment, by inserting the words stricken out in this amendment. It did not pass the Senate. It was introduced again a year ago in the same form in which it passed the House. I then again conferred with the Secretary of the Treasury, and he recommended that those words which the Judiciary Committee had put in be stricken out; so they were stricken out, and the bill reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFERRING LIGHT-HOUSE RESERVATION, FORT HOWARD, MD.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17991) providing for the transfer of light-house reservation at Fort Howard, Md., which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and that the same be considered in the House at this

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the War Department for the purposes of the public defense the present light-house reservation adjoining the military reservation of Fort Howard, at North Point, in Baltimore County, Md., in exchange for a suitable and sufficient portion of said military reservation to be agreed upon between the said Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Secretary of War; which said portion of the military reservation, together with the necessary right of way to permit of access to the same, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Department of Commerce and Labor for light-house purposes; and the Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to remove the light-keeper's dwelling and appurtenant buildings from their present location and to place and establish them complete and ready for use on the new site to be selected therefor, as herein provided, and to erect new structures in lieu of those which it may be found impracticable to remove, in accordance with plans and details to be mutually agreed upon by the said Secretaries; the cost thereof, not exceeding $4,000, to be defrayed from funds appropriated for barracks and quarters for the artillery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hull of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 26072. I had expected during the consideration of that bill to offer an amendment to increase the pension to Julia B. Coghlan from $50 to $100. I was listening as intently as I possibly could, and believed the bill that was being read was one of the omnibus bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and not from the Committee on Pensions. I am desirous of offering an amendment to increase the pension granted to the widow of Admiral Coghlan from $50 to $100 a month, and I would like to be heard on that. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend until the bill before the House is disposed of, which is not the bill to which he is addressing his remarks.

Without objection, the bill reported by the Clerk will be considered.

Mr. SIMS. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is another bill. This is not the bill to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Olcott] referred.

Mr. SIMS. It is not the bill the gentleman just referred to? The SPEAKER pro tempore. No.

The bill (H. R. 26746) was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JULIA B. COGHLAN.

Mr. OLCOTT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 26072, reported from the Committee on Pensions. As I said, I was listening as intently as I could, and I believed that the bill reported by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was being read. I would like very much to receive unanimous consent to go back to this bill and offer my amendment and discuss the matter.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman had better make a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.
Mr. OLCOTT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to reconsider the bill H. R. 26072.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and in which was the item he has indicated to the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to re-consider a portion of a bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's motion is to reconsider the bill.

Mr. OLCOTT. I move to reconsider the entire bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to lay the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Olcott] on the table.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SIMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

During the division,
Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House do not understand the proposition. I ask unanimous consent that it again be stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and the gentleman from Kansas moves to lay that motion on the table. The question is, now, Shall that motion lie on the table, upon which the House is now dividing.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 50, noes 59.

So the motion was rejected. Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. OL-COTT] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided: and the tellers reported-aves 53, noes 71. So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider on the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Division!

The House divided; and there were-ayes 57, noes 40.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to this bill, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 23, page 4, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred."

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I need hardly say the amendment to this bill increases the pension to the widow of Admiral Coghlan from $50 to $100 per month. I do this on account of the meritorious services that were performed by the late rearadmiral in the service of his Government from the time when he entered the Naval Academy until the time when he was retired as a rear-admiral. It is unnecessary to dilate to any considerable extent in regard to his services. I believe that the most violent opponent of this amendment would admit that his services were of great advantage to this Government. I will merely mention the fact that all of us know, that he was the man who fired the first shot at Manila; and that was only one of the constant instances throughout all his life of being ready and prepared to meet every emergency.

The widow of Admiral Coghlan is entirely without means. She was married to him in 1868, and consequently there is no suggestion, as is sometimes made in regard to widows' pensions, of the marriage having occurred after the meritorious services had been rendered. She is now without means and has to live with friends, because she can not afford to live anywhere else. If she receives only $50 it will be insufficient for her support. I think that this country, without any particular regard to a range of precedents, can say this admiral's services were such as would justify unusual action being taken on behalf of Mrs.

She is a woman, I think, of 60 years. Coghlan. When it comes to the question of precedents, I would like to read a letter I have received from the Commissioner of Pensions referring to widows who are receiving more than $50, which amount has been arbitrarily declared by the Committees on Pensions shall be the limit given to widows. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, January 19, 1909.

BUREAU OF PENSIONS, Washington, January 19, 1909.

Hon. J. Van Veehten Olcott, House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Olcott: I have just received your letter of 18th instant, herewith returned, and I regret to say that I am unable to give you at this time all the information you have asked for, because befor I could furnish a complete list of all the widows who are pensioned by special acts at rates in excess of $50 per month I would have to correspond with the different pension agents and obtain from them a report of such pensioners on their rolls.

I will state, however, that the records show the following persons to be in receipt of pensions in excess of $50 per month, which have been granted by special acts of Congress:

The widow of ex-President Garfield, pensioned at $5,000 per annum; the widow of General Sheridan, at $2,500 per annum; the widow of General Logan, at $2,000 per annum; the widow of General Islar, at $2,000 per annum; and the widow of Walter Reed, late major and surgeon, United States Army, at $1,500 per annum.

I will state further that at the close of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1908, there were 12 widows in receipt of pensions of $100 per month by special acts and 8 in receipt of pensions at $75 per month, but to identify these cases it would be necessary for me to call upon the different pension agents, which would require considerable time.

It is believed, however, that the information given above will be sufficient to serve your purpose.

Very respectfully,

V. WARNER, Commissioner.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman state what the age of Mrs. Coghlan is?

Mr. OLCOTT. Sixty, I think. Mr. CAMPBELL. Fifty-six.

Mr. OLCOTT. Well, I will accept the gentleman's statement, if that appears in the papers. I understand that these rules of the Pensions Committees relative to these increases not to exceed $50 in any case have been in existence for ten years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. OLCOTT. But I wish to lay especial stress and emphasis upon the fact that the pension so properly granted to the widow of Surgeon Reed was passed in 1903. So I think that alone gives sufficient precedent for the passage of the amendment that I have offered to this bill. I think that the facts are so before this House relative to the services of the admiral, and I know that the affidavits filed before the committee prove so conclusively that Mrs. Coghlan was without means that I can safely ask this House of Representatives to do an act of justice and to award to Mrs. Coghlan, the widow of Rear-Admiral Coghlan, the sum of $100 per month to be paid to her as a pension.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it may be an ungracious thing to oppose the increase of a pension to anyone, especially a widow, where a Member of the House may desire to see it increased; but I want to call attention to the fact that in this case this gallant officer of the navy, as he was, was educated by the Government, supported by the Government, lived on the pay roll of the Government until after he had passed the age of retirement, so that his service did not shorten his life and did did not interfere with the education of his family.

This bill, without the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, gives $50 a month to his widow, and I want to call the attention of this committee to the fact that both the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions have passed a rule not to give in excess of $30 a month to old soldiers who served in active warfare, even though the service in the field was more than three years. It seems to me that if the committee gives to the widows of distinguished officers $50 a month, it is a very large recognition of the distinction of having married a general officer of the army or an admiral of the navv.

The gentleman refers to the Reed case as one of $1,500 a year. That is not a pension; it was not carried by the Pension Committee, but was reported from the Military Committee, and was for the reason that this man, in the interest of science, in the interest of humanity, went out of his own line of duty and sacrificed his life in order to find some way by which the ravages of yellow fever might be stopped. He left a widow and small children to be educated, so the case is not on all fours with this.

Now, the general law provides for pensions to widows of general officers at $30 a month. It gives the same pensions to widows of admirals of the navy; and it does seem to me that if we are coming in here to increase pensions to $100 a month for any of these widows, we ought to change the general law so that every widow of an admiral and every widow of a general shall receive $100 a month. [Applause.] It is not a fair proposition to bring in here a bill for one when there are many others on the pension rolls equally worthy, equally necessitous, who are content with their $30 a month.

If this bill passes, every one of them should bring in a bill asking for $100 a month. And I want to ask you how you can justify this enormous increase in a pension where there is nothing to take it out of the ordinary run? I am willing to go as far as the committee has gone, but no further. If the man had lost his life in battle, if he had left small children, there might be a reason why this great Government should step in and see that those children are educated. That is not true in this case or in the cases of others, widows of admirals and generals.

It is true that just after the civil war the Congress of the United States was exceedingly liberal in granting pensions to widows of distinguished officers, both of the army and of the navy. That is no precedent for our action now, practically forty-five years after the close of the war; and it seems to me that this bill has received all the consideration it is entitled to at the hands of the Committee on Pensions when they report an increase of $20 a month beyond what is allowed to the other widows of general officers and other widows of admirals of the navy. So far as widows of the Presidents are concerned, the law applies to all.

I hope this House will not to-day set the precedent and certify it to the country that the widow of a man who served even forty years, whose services were good—there is no question about that—but who suffered nothing as a result of the service in his health or in the care of his family, shall be entitled to eight and one-half times as much as the largest pension given to widows of soldiers of this country who preserved the Union, or three and one-third times as much as is allowed to the most deserving of the old Union soldiers who served three years carrying a gun and did as much to preserve the unity of the States and the sacredness of the flag as any man who wore the stars, so far as their ability and opportunity went. [Applause.] hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, under no circumstances would this be a pleasant task. It is doubly unpleasant in this case, because of my acquaintance with the claimant and some social relationship with the family. I had hoped that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Olcott] would not press this matter.

I had hoped that I would be relieved from making public my views in regard to matters of this kind. I have served for very nearly sixteen years on that committee. I have endeavored to give it a fealty that should merit the appreciation of the House, which I endeavored to serve. During the first two years of my membership on that committee there were no rules, no continuity of action upon the part of either the committee or the House. A sudden whim, a sudden impassioned speech carried into law beneficial acts of $75 for the widow of not men of extraordinary worth, while it brought down to $25 the widows of some of the most meritorious men in the service of our Since that time we have endeavored to deal with all claimants on the basis of equity and justice, not because they came from one section or had some favorite Member of the House as an advocate, but we endeavored to deal with all on the basis of equity and justice.

As has been remarked by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], there is not a single, solitary, special, or extraordinary feature in this case. On the pension rolls to-day is the widow of a man who, in the breaking out of the civil war, was a cadet. He asked for leave of absence without pay that he might join the volunteer infantry force of this country. He raised a company, and step by step, by gallant and meritorious service, rose to the position of major-general of volunteers. At the close of the war he went back to the position as a cadet, and then rose, step by step, to be a rear-admiral. And yet Congress would only increase the widow's pension $5 a month, from $35, although the testimony shows that she had only her pension to live on. This case has no comparison with that.

This claimant, on a sworn affidavit filed with the committee, says that she has property to the value of $6,700, almost up to the limit which has been the rule of the committee to prevent any action to increase pensions at all. I believe, in view of the past actions of Congress in the hundreds and thousands of cases of the widows of the officers of the civil war and of the Regular Army and of the Spanish-American war who are to-day only drawing $50, that for the House to pass this act would be an act of almost criminal injustice against those poor widows whose cases we have acted upon before.

I sincerely hope that this House and its membership will recognize the line of equity and justice that has been followed by the two committees and by Congress heretofore. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my testimony to that of the gentleman who has just taken his seat. I have had the honor to serve on the committee from which this bill has been I have an experience that no one but a committeeman can have, and I want to say that if the Members of this House had seen the widows in their weeds and with their tears as often as the members of the committee have, they would know that they have got to hold down their own impulses of generosity all the time, and if they err at all, it is on the side of

Now, I have often seen cases in the early days of my service, after the committee had heard all of the evidence and acted liberally in bringing in a bill-where some favorite Member of the House would get up with a lot of letters and statements that had never been submitted to the committee and make an impassioned speech, and the House would increase the pension over that reported by the committee. That was an injustice to the committee and an injustice to those who had submitted to the action of the committee.

The committee has the best opportunity to investigate and know the facts, as we can not have any kind of uniformity if | tion for forty-eight years?

we undertake to increase pensions over the reports of the committee. The committee is generous and just to a fault. If we are going to come in here and double the report of the committee, double the allowances made by it, there is no telling where we will go. When a member of that committee I fought the pension of the mother of Ensign Bagley, of North Carolina, for an excessive amount. As a member of that committee I stood with it against the increase of the pension of the daughter of President Tyler, then about 80 years of age. They were both from the South. If we listened to every impassioned request of this kind that appealed to our feelings, we would be doing nothing else.

At one time there seemed to be a factious opposition to these bills by a gentleman from South Carolina, and the House made a new rule. All these bills used to be considered Friday nights, and then by a new rule they were considered on two Fridays out of each month and debate sought to be limited. It was pledged on this side—Mr. Richardson of Tennessee being the Democratic leader—that no mere factious opposition should be made to pension bills if the limit of debate was not made a part of the rule. We have kept our pledge, and now bills come in here in omnibus form, just as it is in this case, and therefore it is more important to stand by the committee as to the amount, at least when it comes to increases, than it ever was before; for, in order to get a bill through, we vote for all bills. Before this course was adopted each bill stood on its merits and an amendment could be offered. Now they are grouped in an omnibus bill, and the passing of them is a mere formality, as far as the House is concerned, and the committee is the only protection the country has. Are we going to overturn the findings of the committee, who have given $20 more to this claimant than the widows of the general officers receive? Are we going to do that and put it up to $100 upon the mere presentaion, eloquently and strongly made, of the gentleman from New

If we are going to do that we had better go back to the old way of considering each bill-one at a time-when there will be an opportunity to discuss this kind of an amendment when it is offered. I hope this House will stand by this committee. ing my entire service I want to say that the chairman of that committee has been just to all parties and to all sections and knew neither section nor politics as far as I could tell. Are we now going to break down the rule of the committee and let each pension day be used to offer amendments to increase sundry bills to an extent limited only by the feelings of the House that may be wrought up by the eloquent speech of an influential and able Member? I hope the House will stand by the committee in this case. My colleague from New York is a friend of mine, and I would like to help him, but this would not be helping him. It is doing an injustice to a large class of people, and if this is passed, bills for increases will trouble this House world without end.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, a vote is asked for. I simply want to say this: I yield to no one in appreciation of the services of Rear-Admiral Coghlan, but there is nothing exceptional or unusual in his service or in the case of his widow. We have erred, I think, in our generosity by proposing to increase the pension she now draws from $30 to $50 a month. If this pension is still further increased, I serve notice on this House that as a member of the Pensions Committee, if a Member of the House has an application for a pension for the widow of a private soldier for $25 or $30 or $50 a month, I shall endeavor to get a favorable report on that bill. [Applause and laughter.1

These exceptionally high rates of pension to the widows of officers who have had distinguished service in the army and navy have already gone altogether too far. We are asked here to establish another precedent by following those already made. Every one of these bills that have been passed has been recited here this morning as a precedent for passing this.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Does not the gentleman think that the statement which he has made that he will endeavor to get pensions for $25 and $30 or $50 a month for all widows hereafter will tend to encourage the passage of this amendment? [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; because I am sure the Members of the House know that the country can not now go to that rate of pensions for the widows of soldiers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many other cases are now in existence where a man has served in the navy with distinc-

Mr. CAMPBELL. But he was a retired naval officer, and did not die of injuries incurred in the service or in the line of duty, and he left his wife about $7,000 worth of property, and she got a $30 pension under the general law soon after his death.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How old was Admiral Coghlan when he died?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not sure about that, but I am told that he was 66.

Mr. OLCOTT. Sixty-five.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But he was educated at the expense of the Government. He has been on the government pay roll since 1860, for almost half a century; lived well in the best circles of society, and saw but little active service. The first gun that was fired in the harbor of Manila was fired from his battle ship, but not by him, as has been claimed, but by some private soldier whose widow will get about $12 a month if he should die in line of duty or of injuries incurred in the service. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, before a vote is taken, I would like to put in the RECORD a statement which is made by the Pension Committee itself:

Admiral Coghlan was born in Frankfort, Ky., December 9, 1844; he was appointed acting midshipman September 27, 1860, and thereafter rendered continuous and exceptionally distinguished service, being promoted through the successive grades to that of rear-admiral, attaining that rank April 11, 1902.

I merely want to see that that one statement goes into the RECORD to show that this is an exceptional case, and can not be guided by the arbitrary rules of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Owing to the confusion in the Hall, I could not hear what he said. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this officer had served in both wars, the civil war and the war with Spain?

Mr. OLCOTT. Oh, certainly.

Mr CAMPBELL. He was a cadet at Annapolis during the war of the sixties.

Mr. OLCOTT. I will read from the records of the Navy Department:

On May 28, 1863, he was promoted to acting ensign; July 20, 1863, he was sent to the U. S. S. Sacramento and served on that ship until August 17, 1865—

Mr. COCKRAN. He actually served in two wars? Mr. OLCOTT. Yes. Mr. COCKRAN. Each time before the guns of ti Each time before the guns of the enemy?

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He served as a cadet in the Naval Academy during the fighting that saved the country.

Mr. COCKRAN rose. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, let us have the facts in the case. There seems to be some conflict about them.

Mr. OLCOTT. I will read from the record from the Navy Department-

Mr. COCKRAN. Has the gentleman from New York heard the correction of his statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell]?

Mr. OLCOTT. I did not hear. Mr. COCKRAN. What I wa clearly before the House. I un What I want is to get both statements House. I understand the gentleman from New York to have stated that this officer, Admiral Coghlan, served in two wars, serving each time actually before the guns of the enemy, and I understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell] to correct that statement and to say that his whole service during the civil war was inside the limits of the Naval Academy.

Now, I would like to have the facts made clear to this body, because if that officer served in two wars, risking his life in both, his case is a little different from one who has served in but one war.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would say, in answer to my colleague from New York, that Admiral Coghlan was appointed on September

Mr. OLCOTT. It was a ship. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that the Sacramento was a fighting ship in the service, I am credibly informed by a gentleman, who is a graduate of the Naval Academy.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was a training ship.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Loudenslager, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Hampshire will suspend for a moment.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 24, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CALDER.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., as follows

Oh, Thou Infinite and Eternal Spirit, Father of all Souls, above all, through all, and in us all, we lift up our hearts in prayer and praise to Thee, that God which ever lives and loves, one God, one law, one element, and one far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves. We thank Thee for those indissoluble ties which bind us to Thee and which time nor space can sever.

"We know not what the future hath of marvel or surprise, Assured alone that life and death His mercy underlies."

We are here assembled to-day in memory of a modest, unassuming gentleman who with patriotic zeal and fervor served his State and Nation upon the floor of this House unostentatiously and without conspicuousness, but who did his whole duty and has answered the last summons. "He that hath been faithful over a few things, I will make him ruler over many things." Grant that we may gather up all that is pure and noble and strong and worthy in him and strive to assimilate them and make them ours, that when the summons comes we may move forward worthy of the "well done, good and faithful servant."

Let Thine everlasting arms, O God, be about those who were near and dear to him in the bonds of love and kinship. Help them to look forward, not back, to aspire, not repine, to hope, and not despair, that though he may not come to them, they will surely go to him and live with him in that realm where love reigns supreme forever, and we shall ascribe all praise to Thee in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON HON, CHARLES T. DUNWELL,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FOELKER. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, this great House of Representatives meets to-day to pay its final tribute of respect to one of its Members, who passed away on My appearance here as a Representative from Brooklyn is due to the death of the Hon. CHARLES T. DUNWELL, of the Third Congressional District of New York, and as his successor, and. in accordance with the time-honored custom of this House, it becomes my duty and honor to speak briefly in commemoration of his life and character.

I confess that the task which devolves upon me is not only a sad one, but also most difficult. I therefore trust that the Members of the House, remembering this, will accord to my shortcomings the indulgence which I am only too well aware I shall greatly need.

CHARLES T. DUNWELL was born in the village of Newark, Wayne County, N. Y., on February 13, 1852; he was educated in Lyons Union School and later entered Cornell University in the class of 1873, and at the close of his junior year entered Columbia College Law School in the city of New York, where he was graduated in 1874 with the degree of LL, B. In the same year he was admitted to the bar and successfully practiced his profession in the city of New York up to the time of his death.

In October, 1902, Mr. Dunwell received the Republican nomination for Representative of the Third Congressional District of New York, and at the polls in November was elected by a handsome majority. In 1904 he was reelected, and again in 1906, and served with you during the first session of this Congress until the latter part of May, when he had to be removed to his home in Brooklyn on account of ill health, where he sub-

Now, Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to have learned to know Mr. Dunwell during the campaign of 1902, when he first ran as a candidate for Congress, and from the very beginning of our acquaintanceship during that campaign I discovered in him those noble qualities of mind and heart which so endeared him to those who knew him well. He was indeed by nature sunny and cheerful, and the very atmosphere about him was always warm, bright, and genial.

sequently died on June 12, 1908.

The people of his district loved him. Most of his life was spent among them, and he was always prominent in all their festive gatherings. He loved to associate with them, to greet them with a smile and a hearty grasp of the hand, and in re-turn to receive their love and friendship. There is no doubt that the old soldiers, the men in the customs service, the letter carriers, and the navy-yard employees will miss him, for he was ever their friend. They learned to know his ability and his worth, and they appreciated the faithfulness and devotion with which he served them. His memory will ever be green in the hearts of the people he represented so long and so ably.

He was a self-made man. In his boyhood days he served as a messenger in the legislature of the State of New York, and it was with his earnings while employed there that he saved enough money with which to pay for his education both at the Cornell University and the Columbia College of Law. All that he was, the position that he achieved, was due to his own exertions and honest worth. His career indeed furnishes a splendid lesson to the youth of our country, and goes to show that in this land of the free and "land of opportunity," however lowly or humble a boy's origin may be, he may rise to the highest rank and obtain the most exalted station.

In regard to his death and loss, I quote from an editorial in the Brooklyn Standard Union, one of his home papers:

The announcement of the death of Charles Tappan Dunwell, who for the last five years has represented the Third Brooklyn District in the House of Representatives, will be regarded with equal surprise and regret by his constituents and the public.

Mr. Dunwell made no attempt to shine as an orator in Congress, but he served his constituents faithfully and had their entire confidence and respect, never sparing himself when the interests of Brooklyn demanded his services. He took a conspicuous part in the Republican polities of Kings County, and was at all times willing to subordinate his own aspirations to the interests of his party. Of him it can be truly said that there is no stain upon his record and that he will be followed to his grave with the sincere regrets of all with whom he came into contact.

Since I was sworn in to succeed him and have sat here in this House I have heard so many kindly words spoken of him by his colleagues that it seems almost a pity that while living he might not have known how much he was valued, trusted, and appreciated by them.

His family ties were exceptionally strong. His love and devotion for his wife and children were apparent to all. His solicitude for their welfare was ever uppermost in his mind.

He is survived by a faithful wife and two loving daughters, Elsie and Ruth, and one son, James. What a beautiful monu-ment he has left them, a structure of his own hand—the heritage of a pure and upright life. The marble shaft erected over the grave by the family and friends may crumble to earth and be forgotten, but the influence of his good deeds will continue, like the waves of the mighty ocean, rolling on until they break upon the farther shore.

His life work is finished; death came to him as it should come to us all—not as an enemy, but as a friend; not as a defeat, but as a victory; not as the end, but as the beginning; not in the guise of a serpent, but in the form of an angel. His pleasant voice is hushed; his feet no longer press the sands along the shores of time, but those of us with whom he mingled will until our latest days be gratified for having known such a splendid character, and I believe we are all truer and better men because our friend for a time sojourned with us.

Let us therefore, on this solemn occasion, resolve so to live that when the inevitable summons comes we will be prepared and answer, "Ready."

So live, that when thy summons comes to join The innumerable caravan that moves To that mysterious realm where each shall take His chamber in the silent halls of death, Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night, Scourged to his dungeon; but sustained and soothed By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, in the summer of 1903 I made a tour of the Great Lakes to visit some of the scenes immortalized by the pen of Parkman. On my return, while passing over the waters of Lake Erie, in wandering about the decks of the steamer I fell in with a gentleman who appeared to be seeking companionship. I soon learned that he was the Hon. James W. Dunwell, a justice of the supreme court of New York, whose untimely death last year was deeply deplored by the bar and judiciary of that State. One thing led to another until I ascertained his name and profession, and that his brother, Charles T. Dunwell, had been elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress and would take his seat when the next Congress opened. He kindly expressed a wish for me to become acquainted with him. On my arrival in Washington, when the Congress convened, I found that Mr. Dunwell had secured accommodations at the same hotel where I was domiciled. I met him on the day of my arrival, and an acquaintance thus so happily and peculiarly brought about soon cemented a friendship which will be one of the choicest memories of my congressional life. For years we were much together, so that we knew each other's aspira-tions, tastes, opinions, and characteristics. In no other way, indeed, can this knowledge be accurately acquired. If there is any one lesson a Congressman learns by his service here, it is not to judge any man by his first and casual impressions. He will be apt in many and most conspicuous cases to come to erroneous, and often unjust, conclusions.

A distinguished Member of this House once told me that he had found that the Members of this body were specialists in some directions, and if you can ascertain what that specialty was you would know why that man had been elected to his sent. I do not know as our friend and colleague had any one specialty, but he had a number of what might be called "specialties" which entitled him to the honor and were probably the causes by which he attained and held his seat in the Congress of the United States. He was an optimist. He looked upon the bright side of life. He saw a silver lining in every cloud. His face was turned to the rising sun. No doubt he had his despondent days, but not often. They were temporary obscurations which were but for the moment, when the sun in all its splendor shone again. He looked ever for brighter things, both in this life and in the life to come. Never shall I forget the last evening I passed with him on his return from the South, where he had gone in a vain search for health. A few hours respite from his sufferings made him the same delightful companion as of yore. Even then the shadows were fast gathering, but there was no diminution of his intellectual powers. They even seemed to burn with an undiminished if not an intenser light. While he realized, no doubt, his critical condition, hope eternal reigned and led him to believe that a less strenuous life might prolong his days. Directly after, he left Washington for his heaven in Prochlym seem to leave all carefully seemes forever.

his home in Brooklyn, soon to leave all earthly scenes forever.

Our colleague had an unfailing sense of humor, which smoothed over the rough obstacles of life we encounter on our way. He was an inimitable story teller. A man must have been a stoic who could hear them with solemn countenance, so when we saw him coming how welcome he became, knowing the likelihood of enlivening conversation. His literary acquirements were large, especially in historical and political subjects, so that his observations were illuminated by references to national events, and what the great statesmen of the country had said and done in connection therewith. He was conversant with the best literature of the day, and his quotations therefrom were accurate and pertinent. He did not have the ambition for an orator's reputation and consequently seldom made an elaborate He had the equipment to make one if he desired, but he preferred a terse statement to an elaborate exploitation of the subject. I do not think he ever addressed the House except on some subject in which his constituency was interested, and he never permitted any matter here in which they were interested to be neglected or passed by. He eagerly watched such measures and was indefatigable in securing votes for the side he favored. Thus he became very useful to his district, and his district knew it and appreciated and supported him handsomely at the polls.

The old soldier will not forget him, for he never failed them in their hour of need. The departments, from chief to subordinate, were acquainted with him, for he believed that it was his duty to secure for his people all the legitimate emoluments, either in appointments or government favors, possible and proper. He was an incessant worker for his constituents in all directions, and so they loved and honored him and would doubtless have returned him many times if he had lived.

One can pass along the pathway of life with his cloak wrapped about him looking neither to the right nor left, oblivious to others, intent only upon himself. When he reaches the river Styx and the boatman Charon appears to bear him across the river there is no one present to bid farewell. Another, like our colleague, has a different conception of his earthly duties. On he ventures along the pathway, a bright smile upon his face, a willing hand to help the helpless on his way. Lo, when he reaches the river a great multitude are gathered on its bank with rueful countenance, and when the boatman appears to bear him hence there is still a greater multitude with outstretched hands to greet him on the other shore.

So he was a friend indeed without guile. His family was

So he was a friend indeed without guile. His family was first in his deep affection, then his friends, and then those who, through regard and friendship, had honored him and themselves by his election to this body.

In view of this dispensation of Providence and this severance of earthly ties pressing home upon us at this moment, we are reminded of what Dickens says as Paul Dombey, dying, thinks he is upon a river; and indeed he was—the river of death, gliding along to the great ocean of eternity. He thinks he sees flowers upon its banks and rushes by the river's edge; then the scene closes with this apostrophe, in which we join:

Oh, thank God, all ye that see it, for that nobler fashion yet of immortality, and look upon us angels of young children with feelings not quite estranged when the swift river bears us to the ocean.

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, exceptional opportunity has been afforded me during the past six years to observe the life, character, and public services of Charles T. Dunwell. For nearly six years he represented in this House a district adjoining the district that I have the honor to represent. That subdivision of the city of New York known as the "Borough of Brooklyn," with its million and a half of population, sends six Representatives to this House, and, as in the cases of all large urban communities, they must frequently cooperate and act in unison with reference to matters affecting the general community represented by such delegation.

Thus, even in the absence of any extraordinary circumstances, Members of Congress coming from and representing the same general urban community are brought into close mutual contact by close community of interests. My personal relations and acquaintance with Mr. Dunwell, originating in the manner I have indicated, became more intimate by private business relations, which we subsequently maintained in the practice of law.

On the whole, I probably knew him more intimately than did any other Member of this House. I knew him as he was in his daily life. I knew him as he was in his home and surrounded by the members of his family. I knew the esteem and confidence in which he was held by the people he represented. I knew the respect and affection he commanded from a host of personal friends.

I think that one of the most marked characteristics of his nature was that of personal loyalty. He was a man of strong likes and dislikes, which he did not hesitate to express with characteristic frankness. He may have been uncompromising in his mental attitude toward those he disliked or distrusted, but to those who commanded his confidence and affection he was loyal to the last degree and generous to a fault. For a friend there were few personal sacrifices he would not make.

His spirit of loyalty and generosity toward those he loved nowhere found more beautiful expression than in his home life. I have never anywhere seen a more perfect picture of domestic harmony and happiness than was at any time to be witnessed at his fireside. Surrounded by his wife and children and with the comforts of his home, he found his greatest enjoyment and his most intense happiness. To be away from the joys of his home life was a sacrifice he could not make with resignation. His affection for his family and his love of home life amounted to a passion.

His tastes were distinctly intellectual in their character. He was a keen student of history and he knew and understood the sweet voices of music and poetry. In his home his literary tastes found quick response and sympathy, and at his domestic hearth he found the intellectual atmosphere that furnished for him the breath of life.

Charles T. Dunwell was one of the tenderest-hearted men I ever knew. His sensitive soul could not withstand the ravages of grief for the loss of one he loved. I knew, as did many others, the saddening effect upon his life of the death of his little son. He never ceased to grieve over that loss, and I doubt if a day passed thereafter when he did not live over again the charming parental relations he had been permitted for a few short years to enjoy. It is a fact well known to the members of his family and to his intimate friends that the death of his brother, Justice James W. Dunwell, of the supreme court of the State of New York, about one year prior to the death of Mr. Dunwell, was a blow from which he never recovered, and which was in a large measure responsible for the lingering illness that finally brought him to his end.

I have spoken mainly of the life and character of Charles T. Dunwell. I need not dwell here upon the public services he has rendered. His record for honest and intelligent service in this House is well known to his fellow-Members. His work was performed with diligence and with fidelity to the trust reposed in him by the people he represented. The patriot in spirit, he gloried in the achievements recorded in American history, and intensely desired to see his country maintain and increase its proud prestige among the nations of the world. His influence could always be relied upon in favor of those measures that appealed to his spirit of patriotic pride.

measures that appealed to his spirit of patriotic pride.

A gentle and lovable spirit has passed from the scene of life's turmoil and struggle. His spirit was not that of the warrior. He could not and did not seek to trample and crush those who stood in the way of his ambition. His retiring nature, his love of home and of the quiet and intellectual walks of life in a large measure unfitted him for the warfare of American politics. It is to his honor to say that he did not fight his way to the great distinction of membership in this House. That honor came to him as a mark of esteem and affection on the part of those he so faithfully represented.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, we have met again to pay our last tribute of respect to one of our departed colleagues. It is on occasions like this that we fully realize the wisdom of the great Persian poet and philosopher, Omar, when he said:

We are but pieces of the game He plays Upon this checkerboard of nights and days; Hither and thither moves, and checks, and slays, And one by one back in the closet lays.

CHARLES TAPPAN DUNWELL was an honored Member of this House for over five years. During that time we learned to know him as a man of sterling integrity and splendid ability. He was a true type of the American citizen. He was not born to the purple. As a boy he served as a page in the assembly of his native State. The money which he earned in that capacity helped to defray his expenses as a student at the Cornell University. The experiences of his early youth—those years in which he struggled to secure an education for himself—actuated him in later years in extending a helping hand to ambitious young men of slender means by giving them opportunities to rise in the world. And so we find that most, if not all, of his appointees to West Point and Annapolis were boys who had attended night school, and who were compelled to work for a living during the day. Nor did his interest in them cease after the appointments had been made, for he followed their subsequent records with the greatest pride.

Mr. Speaker, the life of our departed colleague teaches us the splendid possibilities of American citizenship. Graduated from the Columbia Law School in 1874, with the degree of LL. B., he entered upon the practice of the law in New York, and rapidly rose to a position of distinction in his chosen profession. It was but natural that he should take an active interest in public affairs. And the residents of his district honored him time and again because they had unbounded faith in him as a man, a citizen, and a patriotic American.

As a Member of this House he was a hard worker, an earnest student, an industrious Representative. He was constant in his attendance at the sessions of Congress, and it is not improbable that his death was hastened by his desire to return to his seat before he had fully recovered his health in the sunny Southland, to which he had gone when first stricken with illness.

I remember him well when he came back to us. He was feeling somewhat better, physically, and he looked to the future buoyant with hope. His doctor had advised against his attending the session in his then physical condition, but he felt it a duty to be present during the debate on the currency question in the closing days of the first session of this Congress. His last attendance here was when he voted on the currency bill. I firmly believe that his conscientious devotion to duty was largely responsible for his relapse, and but a few weeks thereafter, on the 12th day of June, 1908, he was summoned to the sleep everlasting.

He left surviving him his widow, two daughters, and a son. He was intensely devoted to his family. It was his aim to give his children every educational advantage in order that they might be properly equipped to occupy their respective stations in life. To his bereaved wife and children we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and though their loved one has gone from them, they must be comforted in the knowledge that he was highly esteemed by those who were privileged to know him, and that by reason of his many admirable traits, and his exceptional character, he was one "who was beloved by his fellow-men."

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, Charles Tappan Dunwell, the son of Almerin and Elizabeth Storms Dunwell, was born in the little village of Newark in Wayne County, N. Y., and when 2 years old moved with his parents to Lyons, a beautiful old town in the same county. Here Mr. DUNWELL spent his boyhood days, attended the union school and prepared for college at the Lyons Academy.

He entered Cornell University in the fall of 1869 as a member of the class of 1873, where his brother, the late Judge James W. Dunwell, was at the same time a student.

He left Cornell at the close of his junior year in 1872 and entered Columbia Law School in New York City, where he graduated with the degree of LL. B. in 1874. In May of that year he was admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor of the New York bar.

He practiced law for a few years in New York City, but for some years prior to his election to Congress had been one of the successful general agents of the New York Life Insurance Mr. Dunwell had always resided in Brooklyn since his graduation from Columbia Law School.

Four or five years after he had made Brooklyn his home he met at a friend's house in that city one evening Miss Emma B. Williams, a daughter of the late Rev. Samuel Williams, the famous abolitionist and founder of the First Baptist Church of Pittsburg. On April 22, 1880, they were married, and lived an ideally happy and congenial life-most loyal and true to each other in all the joys and sorrows, the troubles and worries, the vicissitudes of life.

Mr. and Mrs. Dunwell had four children, three of whom-Elsie, Ruth, and James W.—with their mother, survive him.

Mr. Dunwell had suffered from Bright's disease for some time, and in last February, while attending to his duties as a Member of this House, was stricken with a severe attack of this malady. His wife accompanied him to Summerville, S. C., with hopes that in this warmer climate he might recover his health.

He so far improved as to be able to return to Washington and vote with his party on many important measures. He never fully regained his former robust health, however, and becoming much more seriously affected by the dangerous disease from which he had so long suffered returned to his home in Brooklyn, never to leave it again until his death.

At the time of his death his son James was ill in the house with scarlet fever, so that the health authorities of the city would not permit a public funeral.

No committee of this House could attend, nor could his personal friends in Brooklyn be present. After private services for the family at the house, all that was mortal of our friend and colleague was laid to rest in Evergreen Cemetery.

Mr. DUNWELL was a most devoted husband and father and loyal to family ties and kindred.

The bond of affectionate sympathy, trust, and regard existing between Mr. Dunwell and his only brother, Judge James W. Dunwell, was such as seldom exists. The news of his brother's sudden and unexpected death gave a shock to Mr. Dunwell's already weakened nervous system, from which he was unable to recover, and hastened the fatal termination of his long-standing ailment. In conversation with his friends Representative DUNWELL used often to speak in terms of deepest regard and affectionate pride of the lovable character and successful career of his brother, and seemed to enjoy hardly anything so much as his frequent visits to his brother's beautiful home in Lyons, N. Y.

He came of a sturdy, long-lived ancestry, old settlers of Wayne County.

He used to relate with great pleasure the incidents of a visit made with his father when but 6 years of age to his great-grandfather Dunwell, then hale and hearty, sound in mind and body, although 106 years old-just one hundred years older than his great-grandson, and who lived four years longer, to be 110 years of age at his death, the most remarkable man, Mr. DUNWELL often said, that he had ever met.

During his whole life Mr. Dunwell was always an active and sincere Mason; at one time master of Ancient Lodge, No. 724, A. F. and A. M. At the time of his death he was most worshipful and potential master of Aurora Grata Chapter of Rose Croix and a member of Aurora Grata Consistory, Aurora Grata Club, Kismet Temple, N. M. S., and was a thirty-third degree Mason of the Scottish and York rites.

He was always an ardent and loyal organization Republican, he and his brother, Judge Dunwell, being lifelong friends and especially loyal and devoted supporters of Senator Thomas C. PLATT during the many years the Senator was Republican leader in the State of New York. Mr. Dunwell had been active in Republican politics in Brooklyn for more than a quarter of a century.

In 1890 he was the Republican candidate for comptroller of the city of Brooklyn, and was defeated by Theodore F. Jackson, Democratic candidate, by only a small majority. In 1902 he was elected to Congress from the third district of New York, and was reelected in 1904 and in 1906, and would undoubtedly have been again reelected in 1908 had he lived.

Throughout his congressional career Representative WELL was careful and attentive to his duties, rarely missing a division or call for tellers, and yet more rarely absent from roll call. The Republican House leaders could invariably depend upon his presence and vote when party measures came up for action. He was more devoted than any other Representative to caring for the interests of federal employees in New York.

Most measures passed in the last six years for shorter hours of labor and increase of the small compensation of the lower grades of employees in the customs service in our great city were measures introduced by him, which would probably never have been passed but for his ardent and energetic support. Every measure of this kind, whether his or that of some other Member, received his aid and hearty support.

He was always active in behalf of the veterans of the civil war, and many a one of these old soldiers is indebted to his labors for the pension that makes his old days more easy and comfortable.

Mr. Dunwell believed in the increase of the navy, its maintenance upon a footing commensurate with the great power and wealth of our Nation. He believed that part of our war ships should be built in our navy-yards, and always supported measures for that purpose.

By his death this House has lost an honest, conscientious, hard-working, patriotic Member.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to add a word of tribute to the memory of my esteemed and honored friend, CHARLES TAPPAN DUNWELL. While on my way to the last Republican national convention the sad intelligence of his death was brought to me and to others of his friends who were on the same train. The June day was bright and sunny, but deep sorrow dulled the radiance of the sun and chilled with sad regret the hearts of those men who were his friends and colleagues.

Mr. Dunwell's illness began in May, 1907, when he suffered a severe shock through the death of his beloved brother, James W. Dunwell, justice of the supreme court of the State of New York, and from that time, though he rallied on a few occasions, even attending to his congressional duties, his health failed rapidly. His last appearance at the House was made against his physician's advice, at the time the currency bill was pending, and on the 12th day of June, 1908, he passed beyond the bounds of this mortal life.

Mr. Dunwell became a resident of Brooklyn more than a quarter of a century ago, and was a beloved and respected citizen of that city for many years. He entered the Fifty-eighth Congress two years before my election and represented the district adjoining mine. It was my honored privilege to seek his counsel in many matters of legislation, and his superior knowledge and intelligent advice often directed me in the right way.

Mr. Dunwell was one of the best informed men on the subject of American history in this country. From the first settlement in Virginia until the present day and with the settlement in every part of the country he was thoroughly familiar. His modest and gentle disposition cloaked much of his ability, but to those whose privilege it was to know him intimately his well-stored mind opened like a flower, shedding forth fragrance of thought and helpful wisdom.

Mr. Speaker-

That which the fountain sends forth returns again to the fountain.

Just so does our Maker send forth to the earth men of different types—some unobtrusive and gentle, others strong and positive, each to do his work as he is fitted, but both to be gathered back again to the fountain of immortality to be bathed in the waters of everlasting life.

To his bereaved wife and to his children I can but say:

His name will live and ever be His children's priceless legacy, While he doth rest.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, we meet to pay a final tribute to the memory of Charles Tappan Dunwell. He served almost six years in this House. His naturally modest manner, combined with ill health, deterred him from taking a very active part in debate. Had he chosen to do so, it would have been to the illumination of the subjects discussed, with resulting benefit to the country.

Mr. Dunwell was a man of liberal education, of broad culture, and of sound judgment. After years of active practice at the bar he turned to commercial life, where he achieved success. Although of a retiring disposition, he had many characteristics which atted him for public life. He was an excellent speaker, he was well informed on questions of public interest, in many civic bodies he occupied a prominent place, and his advice was freely sought and unhesitatingly followed by those who were associated with him.

In politics he was a stanch and uncompromising Republican. He believed his party best adapted to bring about the desired results in the administration of public affairs; he was sincere in his belief, and somewhat intolerant of those who did not agree with him.

While his party had selected him as a candidate for one of the most important offices in the city of Brooklyn, and he had been an active and aggressive figure in his party's councils for many years, I had not the pleasure to meet him before he commenced his service here. He had the respect and esteem of all who knew him. However much he differed from others, he maintained and presented his views with courage, with dignity, and with a self-restraint that commanded the admiration of, but gave no offense to, those with whom he disagreed.

but gave no offense to, those with whom he disagreed.

As a result of my service in this House, a belief which I early entertained has become a profound conviction. It is beyond all question that the men of strong party beliefs and convictions, aggressive in their adherence to their belief in party government, are those whose labors are most beneficial to the people.

Mr. Dunwell was of this type. Although differing in our political opinions, our relations were most pleasant. He was a delightful companion, a desirable associate. A man of lovable character, he endeared himself to all with whom he had any association. As an opponent it was dangerous to ignore him. Many underestimated his capacity because of his modest demeanor; but those who did so speedily realized that he was a well-equipped and resourceful competitor.

Those who were more intimately associated with him than it had been permitted to me to be more fully enjoyed and appreciated those many excellent gifts with which he had been endowed. He was devoted to his family, and his greatest pleasure and comfort seemed to be in being with them.

The community which he represented was well served. He was industrious, diligent, and faithful. He was courteous and attentive to his constituents. Well equipped by his early advantages and his ripe experience, he had so represented his district as to commend himself to the people irrespective of party.

His death was a distinct loss to his people and to the country, as well as to those dearest to him. To have known him was an advantage, to have been associated with him was a pleasure, to be permitted to voice a tribute to his memory is a privilege to be highly cherished.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Speaker, I am profoundly grateful for the opportunity of participating in the tribute which this House, in obedience to an ancient and honorable custom, to-day pays to the memory of the late Representative and my distinguished colleague, Charles Tappan Dunwell, of Brooklyn, N. Y. I had the pleasure of serving with him during all of his career as a Member of this House. He died in the prime of life, leaving a host of friends saddened by the loss of one of the best and most genial friends, one of the truest and most useful of our distinguished public men. Mr. Dunwell was a very modest man, but he was always willing to give the administration and Congress the benefit of his constant study and clear and incisive logic.

He was a thorough diplomat, and, though he took vigorous and pronounced positions in debate, his uniform courtesy and good humor always disarmed hostility and won the respect and confidence of the membership of this body, without regard to party

He was always ready. Some of the best speeches made by him were delivered upon the spur of the moment. Circumstances arose in debate in which an answer or elucidation of a situation seemed imperative, and, while he made no preparation for the delivery of a set speech, he was so full of his subject that he was prepared to present the question at issue with the cleverness, strength, and polish of a carefully revised speech.

Many instances of this faculty will occur to the memory of the older Members with whom he long served.

But Mr. Dunwell was not a man of many words. Excellent as he was as a speaker, he was a worker rather than a talker, and he never forgot his duty to his State and country. His first love was to the people of his district, and he allowed no opportunity to pass unnoticed that enabled him to contribute to their welfare and prosperity.

their welfare and prosperity.

His death, while not unlooked for, when it came was a shock to the good people of his district and the State of New York.

Why do the shadows oftenest come
Where the other shadows are?
Why do the hordes of anguish follow
Hard on the heels of care?
Why did Christ come sorrowing
And not to a glad refrain?
Why was the world's redemption scheme
Born in sorrow and pain?
Why is the heart of motherhood
By the hand of an infant torn?
Why must a nation travail
That some great truth be born?

Why is the wine the purest
That is the hardest pressed?
Why, after hours of toiling,
Comes the sweetest space of rest?
Why is subtlest perfume found
In flowers that grow in shade?
And why from dwellers in vales of tears
Are shapers of destiny made?

Do you think the life of Christ
Would have had that power to thrill
If there had been no Gethsemane,
No Calvary's shadowy hill?
Or do you think that your own life
Would have been pure, as it is to-day,
If the disappointments that came to it
Passed by some other way?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to know Mr. DUNWELL as intimately as some of those who have spoken before me, but, as a Representative from a neighboring borough of a great city, I was naturally thrown somewhat into his company. He was a country boy and a self-made man, illustrative of the tendency that has been so marked, the movement of the country people to the city, and yet he became a thorough city man. If I am not mistaken, he ran for high city office, although unsucessfully, in his home borough. And as a Representative here of a city district he was as devoted to the interests of that city district as any man could be whose life had been spent in the city from birth. Some years ago a litigation took me to Wayne County and to Lyons, the place where the Dunwell family latterly lived. The judge before whom I appeared was Mr. Justice James W. Dunwell, whose name has several times been mentioned by speakers. He was very much like his brother, Representative DUNWELL.

The esteem in which Mr. Justice Dunwell was held and the high regard that the citizens of Lyons and Wayne County had for him were due to the same traits in his character that have been alluded to as belonging to the character of Representative DUNWELL. He was able, conscientious, modest, and a faithful servant of the people. Mr. Justice Dunwell played a leading part in the political and public life of Wayne County, and even at that time his advice was eagerly sought by people on all questions as to which they were in doubt. His brother, going to Brooklyn, gained a prominent and enviable place there, too, for the name of Dunwell. Now, in a short space of time both have passed away. Have they done their part well? The record answers "yes." I remember that it was while he was visibly suffering from his mortal illness that Representative Dunwell came here to do his part as a member of his party, as a Member of this House, and as a servant to his people toward consummating legislation that he thought of greatest moment to the country. Verily, he was faithful until death.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, we meet here to-day to pay a last tribute to a friend, correctly described by our Chaplain as a modest, unassuming gentleman. In the speeches which have been made much has been unfolded of interest regarding the life and character of Charles T. Dunwell. I desire to speak briefly upon one phase, which, to my mind, illustrates a typical condition in our country in the century which has passed. We have heard, and we all know, that it was in the little, thrifty, but beautiful village of Newark that this young man commenced his career. During the nineteenth century the great progress of this country was, in the main, in the hands of men of the type of CHARLES T. DUNWELL. The great city and its influences were to come, but that was the century of the village and of the rural influence.

From each of these villages went out, as went out from Newark the Dunwells, the best young men of the village, rising by a natural prominence; rising because of ambition; because of a certain intensity of purpose; because, in the main, of clean lives; gradually ascending above the level of their fellows, selected naturally, first, for the minor honors in the community in which they lived, and then, sometimes, as in the case of Mr. DUNWELL, seeking the rising star of the ascendancy of the city influence. My colleague [Mr. Parsons] has said that, though born in the country, Mr. Dunwell became a city man. Born myself in the country, and therefore, perhaps, with larger com-prehension of the results of birth and training there, I entertain a doubt as to whether any man so born, so nurtured, and so trained ever becomes, in all essentials, a city man.

He brings with him all that is best of the country, and by reason of his training brings to him in his later life all that is best of the city. So our friend continued in the city of his adoption the course of honor which he had begun in the country There was no mystery about it. It was a simple, natural illustration of the opportunities of American life. poet Gray one hundred and fifty years ago sang of "a youth to fortune and to fame unknown," and, with the inevitable philosophy of those days and of that country, said:

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

There is no need in this country for so pathetic an end of life begun in a country village, and so I say, with more than passing interest, we gather to-day to mingle our recollections as to the life that has passed. Our friend achieved honor and distinction.

from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] has well said that he served his district admirably and faithfully. He had gone from youth not to age as we know it, but to the mellow fullness of the years. He had performed each duty as it came. His family had received that tender solicitude and great affection which has been spoken of. The religion in which he believed had received daily his unashamed support. There was nothing that he need look back upon with pain or regret in the larger sense. He had grasped his opportunities as they came. He had done a man's work each day.

It is true that to the finite eye it seems as though our friend, toiling up with the labor of the early days, which we may only guess, struggling as he must have done to have gained his first foothold in the, at first, inhospitable city, achieving honors and distinction there, was taken away just at the age when having toiled, when having achieved, he could look forward to the fruition of a kindly, genial, pleasant old age. But we do not know those things. Of what the future holds in store for any of us we know no more than on the 12th day of June we knew that CHARLES T. DUN"ELL should pass into eternal rest. Our hands can not draw aside the veil.

We can by the life of such a man be led to realize how much more there is of value in the daily achievement than in the elusive hope of future remembrance.

My colleague from New York [Mr. CALDER] has spoken of the news which was brought to us in the speeding train on that June day. It did cast a shadow over us as colleagues of our dead friend, but we each had our burden. We proceeded as he would have proceeded. The work of the day was upon us. The responsibilities which the constituents in our districts had laid upon those of us who were delegates were to be discharged. We paid on that June day and on the succeeding June days, as men and as Representatives, the best tribute which it was possible for us to have paid to the memory of a man of such steadfast purposes as was Charles T. DUNWELL, by doing as he would have done in our placecontinuing to discharge the duties that were laid upon us. It is that kind of service that has made our country great. is that kind of resolve and purpose that will continue it in success and prosperity.

Coming into his fifty-seventh year, our friend had one felicity which it has always seemed to me worth while. He died in the service. There was for him no useless day. There was the long suffering and the sickness, it is true; that is the common lot of man; but there was no sitting idly by the fireside; no watching the activities of those who were to succeed him; no planning with the brain, with the body unable to fulfill the plan.

In middle life death came to him. In the stirring book of the Maccabees, drenched almost with blood, recording practically nothing but battles, except ultimate success, there is one line which gives pause, the line which has been quoted and paraphrased through the centuries since, and yet always to me a line of peace and quiet—the single line, "Nicanor lay dead in his harness." And so with Charles T. Dunwell. With every day's work done, with duties performed, on that quiet June day, when the rush and the burden were upon those of us who survived him, as the rush and the burden still are, he, with his work done, surrounded by his family, in the district which had honored him, in the State where he was born, with the fight of his life ended, lay dead in his harness.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, during a session of Congress the time of Members of the House is so occupied with a multiplicity of duties that but little opportunity is afforded us to become personally and well acquainted with many of our colleagues, and it oftentimes becomes difficult for us even to keep advised as to the progress of events in the House.

It had escaped my attention until this morning that this hour had been set apart for memorial services upon the life and character and public services of our deceased colleague, whose loss we mourn and whose memory we cherish to-day, the Hon. CHARLES T. DUNWELL. I did not anticipate that I should say anything upon this occasion, and I rise now, Mr. Speaker, only to say a few brief words in token of the esteem and regard in which I held our deceased friend and colleague.

I first met Mr. DUNWELL during the Fifty-eighth Congress. As a stranger to nearly all the Members of that Congress, I came to Washington to contest for a seat in this honorable body. Fortunately for me, I brought with me on that occasion a letter of introduction from one of my relatives to Mr. Dunwell. I well recall with what cordiality and friendship he greeted me. I found on presenting the letter to him that he was well acquainted with nearly all of my relatives, and from that time until he left us forever I was on terms of intimacy and friendship with him.

It was not my lot to serve upon any of the committees of the House with Mr. DUNWELL. He was not, as it has been said here to-day, an active Member upon the floor. I can not, therefore, speak from personal knowledge of his public service. Yet all of us knew sufficient in regard to that service to be able to testify to what has been frequently said here to-day, that he was faithful to his trust and ever watchful of the interests of his constituents.

It is not as a Member of the House that I desire to speak of him to-day, but particularly of him as a man. I found him a true and loyal friend, modest, unassuming, and unostentatious. of noble impulse, of high ideals, and of a kind and generous disposition. After all, it is those qualities of heart that we love to cherish upon such an occasion as this. There is but little that can be said of comfort either to his family or to his friends that has not already been said. Perhaps after all, Mr. Speaker, the best consolation we can give to them is to be found in that thought born within us all and so beautifully expressed by the

There is no death! What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Mr. Speaker, on occasions like this where we are gathered to pay tribute to a departed friend and colleague, it is ever impressed upon my mind that what we say here matters but little, but that what our friend did here and elsewhere matters greatly, and as we feel willing to come here to bear our testimony to the love and respect that we bore him, we desire to communicate to the family and to his friends these facts. Those that have preceded me have gone more into detail than I shall about his life. I wish to say amen to it all. We all miss his kindly, smiling face and pleasant greeting. Coming here as a new Member, I very well remember the kindly words and good advice I received at his hands. He was always willing, cheerfully, to give me the benefit of his judgment in matters wherein I sought it. He was a very useful Member of our delegation, one of the most kindly spirits I have ever known, and I trust that when the time comes for us to go to that final reckoning to which he has gone we will find as little against our record as he has against his. I feel that upon occasions of this kind one value is that we may search ourselves to see whither we are going, to see whether we are doing our full duty, not only to our constituents, not only to our State, not only to our Nation, but also to our God. Perhaps it may be well for us all to take this introspective view and see whether all is well with us. There is a duty devolving upon all of us along all these lines. We can not dodge it if we would. We must meet it from day to day. It is no more worth while for us to say in life that we are making no profession, because we are not sitting in the high seat in the synagogue, than it would be to try to dodge a vote because we are not an active Member on the floor of the House. We certainly are accountable for all our acts, for all we do, and for what we fail to do, and it is my utmost desire that while we are gathered here to-day to pay this tribute of love and respect to our beloved friend, we may take cognizance of the responsibility resting upon us, not only as Members of this House, but as citizens of this great Nation and integral parts, however small, of the Divine plan of creation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I can not let this occasion pass without paying my humble tribute of respect and affection to the memory of our departed friend and colleague, Charles T. Dunwell, and expressing in a few words my appreciation of his fine abilities, high character, kindness of heart, and goodfellowship, for which I entertained a very high degree of esteem and admiration.

Although we were born and reared in neighboring counties, I never had the pleasure of his acquaintance until after his election to the Fifty-eighth Congress. The Empire State's delegation in this House, consisting of 37 Members, is so large that of necessity there is not the same opportunity for intimate social intercourse between all of its Members as obtains between those of smaller States. However, I knew his brother, James W. Dunwell, who was an able and upright justice of the supreme court, and early sought the acquaintance of our new colleague from Brooklyn; and my regard and friendship for him continued to grow with passing years and my more intimate knowledge of his delightful personality and his high ideals and aspirations.

He was not a showy or ostentatious man. He never sought notoriety purely for its sake. He did not play to the galleries or do sensational things in order that his name might appear in the newspapers. He was a plain, modest, unassuming man, who did his duty day by day as he saw it. He did his committee work faithfully and well. He discharged his constitutional duties as a Representative in Congress fearlessly and according to the dictates of an enlightened judgment and conscience, and with unusual zeal and industry he served his district and looked after the many and miscellaneous matters in which his constituents were interested. His was a genial and sunny disposition. He had a keen sense of humor and a ready wit, and when feeling well and disposed to relax a little from the stern duties of his strenuous life, he was a prince of good fellows. But he was an uncompromising champion of what he believed to be right, and when his moral or political principles were assailed he was bold and courageous and intensely earnest in their defense. Even when he was afflicted with the chronic and fatal malady to which he finally succumbed, he maintained his genial and buoyant appearance and on all occasions had a pleasant word and genial smile for his friends. Bravely he fought against disease, for he loved his family, his friends, his work, and the joy of life, and wanted to live. But he faced his dread enemy with cheerful resolution born of the consciousness of a life well lived and of full preparation to give an account of his stewardship.

Like thousands of other ambitious young men who were born and reared in the country, he went to the great metropolis to seek his fortune, and he succeeded. By tireless industry, good ability, and rigid integrity he made his mark and impressed his individuality on that great intellectual and progressive center, where competition and rivalry are fierce, selfish, and unrelenting. He was fairly successful in the practice of law, in the insurance business, and in politics; but he was stricken down in middle age, while he was yet looking forward and planning for the future. He had worked hard and established an enviable reputation, and it is sad that it was not permitted him to live out the allotted years of man, that he and his family might reap the rewards of the toil and self-denial of his early man-hood. By his untimely removal a useful and honorable career in this House was cut short. His constituents will miss him, for he was a faithful and efficient Representative. We will miss him, for he was a helpful colleague and genial friend, around whose delightful companionship cluster many pleasant recollections. His family will miss him most, for he was a model and affectionate husband and kind and indulgent father.

Mr. FOELKER. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that there are a number of Members of the House who have expressed a desire to participate in these proceedings, but who are unavoidably absent to-day. I therefore ask unanimous consent that general leave to print be granted for twenty days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the Senate proceed now with House bill 26399, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 26399) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropria-tions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amend-

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read, taking up first the committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 2, line 6, to increase the appropriation for cleaning snow and ice from cross walks and gutters in the District of Columbia, under the act approved March 2, 1895, from $2,000 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to page 3, line 7.
Mr. LODGE. In the clause just read I suggest with great deference that the wording might be improved. It says:

That hereafter no advertisement of any kind shall be displayed and no articles of any kind, except a guide to the Monument, shall be sold in or around the Washington Monument.

If it means guidebook, the word "book" ought to be inserted, so that a guidebook may be sold in and around the Monument. I do not suppose anybody proposes to sell a guide, but it may be that it is proposed to sell a guidebook.

Mr. HALE. Put in the word "book."

Mr. LODGE. I suggest the insertion of the word "book."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 3, line 5, after the word "guide," insert the word "book."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 18, page 3, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.: That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase or condemnation proceedings, for military purposes, land adjoining the military reservation of Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., and for this purpose the sum of $100,000, appropriated by act of May 27, 1908, for the purchase of said land, is hereby made available.

Mr. BURKETT. It occurs to me that that is rather an un-Mr. BURKETT. It occurs to the that that is rather an di-usual appropriation in this bill. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why that particular paragraph comes in an urgent appropriation bill, and if it is usual to carry appropriations for buying land in a deficiency bill.

Mr. WARREN. I think the difficulty will be found in the fact that it is impossible to appropriate in definite terms beforehand to cover the findings of a board of condemnation. the board of condemnation having proceeded with its work this item now makes available money that has already been appropriated for the purpose.

Mr. BURKETT. The purchase then has been authorized? Mr. WARREN. It has been authorized heretofore. Mr. BURKETT. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to page 5, line 14, the last paragraph read being as follows:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation "General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry," including each and every object authorized by law and specified under the appropriation of $947,200 under this title in the "Act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909," approved May 23, 1908, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $500,000.

Mr. HALE. I have a departmental communication saying that an appropriation of $500,000 is not needed. I fully agree in that, and in order that the whole clause may be open for examination in conference, I move to strike it out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 5, strike out lines 5 to 14, inclusive. Mr. CLAY. The Senator proposes to strike out the appropriation of $500,000 for the Agricultural Department?

Mr. HALE. I propose to strike out the whole clause in order to throw it into conference for explanation.

Mr. CLAY. I think the Senator is absolutely correct, because the hearings show that only $200,000 has been spent. Mr. HALE. I have already had a communication stating that the amount is too large, and I want to investigate it.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 22, to strike out the following:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE.

For purchase, care, and maintenance of automobiles for use of the President, $12,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it a committee amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I beg pardon, it is not. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 6, after line 1, to insert:

SENATE.

For fuel, oil, and cotton waste, and advertising, for the heating and electrical apparatus, exclusive of labor, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public printing and binding," on page 7, after line 6, to insert:

For printing and binding for the Supreme Court of the United States, $7,000; and the printing for the Supreme Court shall be done by the printer it may employ, unless it shall otherwise order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 10, to insert: For printing and binding for the Court of Claims, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill for a little information regarding the item found on page 2, beginning with line 4, for cleaning snow and ice from sidewalks and guiters. I notice that the House provided for an appropriation of $2,000, and it has been increased to $7,000.

Mr. President, I simply want to say that if $7,000 is enough, of course we are fully satisfied; but if there is any question about $7,000 being enough to keep the sidewalks and the gutters of the city of Washington clear of snow and ice, then I think the appropriation ought to be increased.

There has been no more disgraceful spectacle in this Capital City within my recollection than the snow, the slush, ice, and dirt on the streets during the last week or ten days, marring the attractiveness of the city and interfering with the comfort and convenience of citizens and visitors. I think it is simply awful that the citizens of Washington and the visitors to the capital are obliged to go about in such mud and filth as they have been obliged to go over during the last ten days.

I should like to know whether there is not some way by which a permanent fund could be placed at the disposal of those in authority that the streets may be kept clean.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations now considering the District of Columbia appropriation bill has in mind the very remedy that the Senator suggests, of appropriating a sufficient sum to enable the commissioners always to have money on hand for this purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not think that what I said was a criticism of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of course the committee can not foresee with accuracy approaching snowstorms which will visit Washington in the springtime, and yet during the time of my service here I have seen the streets absolutely impassable from snow and ice for days at a time. It seems to me that there should be pride enough in the attractiveness of this city and in the health of its inhabitants to furnish sufficient money to make the streets clear and open for pedestrians.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say further to the Senator, Mr. President, if he will permit me, that the Senate is not to blame in this matter. The appropriations that have been made by the Senate from year to year have been adequate to accomplish the desired result, but they have not always been kept in the bill, much to my regret.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I wish to make one further observation. This appropriation, as I understand the Senator from Maine, is available upon the passage of the bill, and that $7,000, if there is no deficit now in the fund, will be available for the use of the streets immediately. this is very essential.

Suppose a storm should visit this city in the latter days of February, and at the period when it is filled with strangers the streets should be full of snow or ice, it would be outrageous to present such a spectacle as that to the American people, and yet by neglect this identical situation may arise.

I am very glad to learn that it is the intention of the committee to take some steps that will give a permanent fund from which work of this character may be performed. If the appropriation of $7,000 is sufficient, I am not going to move an amendment, but if it is not sufficient I hope that an amendment will be offered by the committee, and that we may have an ample fund for this purpose.

Mr. HALE. I do not know, Mr. President, whether this appropriation of $7,000 will be enough to meet all the storms that may visit us between now and the 4th of March, but it is a great deal better than $2,000. That everybody will realize.

The Senator from Michigan and the Senate may as well understand now that in Washington row can not also the derstand now that in Washington you can not clear the snow and ice from the streets and make them comfortable for travel, and to reach the doors of houses when driving in carriages to the sidewalks by any appropriation of $2,000 or $7,000 or $70,000. The city is different from any other city in the United States, it may be, in the world. Its breadth of streets and of sidewalks and the many reservations and parks make it entirely different from a compact city with narrow streets and narrow sidewalks, or a city which has immense revenues at its disposal.

If the Committee on the District of Columbia, which primarily has jurisdiction of this subject, and which treats all matters that come before it most intelligently, should undertake a scheme by which after a snowfall all snow and ice should be removed from the streets, as is done in New York, Philadelphia, and other great northern cities, it would take more than $100,000 to do it. We never have embarked upon that, and, Mr. President, we never will have a comfortable time for ourselves, our families, our guests, and the many people who betake themselves to Washington, especially before the ceremonials which attend the inauguration of the President once in four years, without appropriating large sums. That we have never done, and I fancy we are not likely to do it.

We shall have to submit to these inconveniences. It is as much as your life is worth, if you are in a cab, to get it up to the sidewalk and get to your own door. Certain portions of that great street, Pennsylvania avenue, the noble roadway which is perhaps more used than any other—the south side of that avenue-I have not been over it this morning, but I was over it on Saturday-is nothing but an accumulation of snow and ice, hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of tons in the extent of one mile, piled up between the sidewalks and the railway in the center of the street. There is no force, there is no money, and there has never been, under which the Commissioners of the District can set a hundred carts at work to cart that off, as is done in other great cities. It has never been done here, and will never be done until we embark in a range of appropriations into which we have never entered.

It will cost a great amount of money every winter to clear up the snow and cart it away as fast and as soon as it falls, so as to keep the streets clean, as is done in large cities after two or three days. I am not certain but that I should vote for it if it comes in that form; but the District Committee must formulate what legislation is needed and must inquire into the extent of these appropriations. When that committee either puts it on the District appropriation bill, or reports it as an amendment to a bill of this kind, we shall have it before us, but not till then.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am not ready to admit that a well-organized and properly disciplined force may not be equal to such an emergency as we have confronted during the last ten days. There are cities that boast of their attractiveness and beauty, situated in the same degree of latitude as this, which keep their streets clean. If the fault here is with the organization having the matter in charge, then it ought to be remedied. We have less to contend with as to the volume of snow and ice than they have in New York and Philadelphia, and other large cities, and we should do the work as well at least. Indeed, we should set an example for cleanliness.

I do not want to find fault with the Committee on Appropriations or with the Committee on the District of Columbia, but these emergencies arise occasionally, and when they arise there ought to be some way to meet them, and to meet them promptly.

Now, I venture my judgment that if the fund had been available the early part of last week during the first storm, the snow could have been cleaned from the sidewalks and the streets, and that the second storm could not have left them in such bad condition. After spending so much money on the streets, and paving them appropriately, and having the gutters properly prepared, and the sewerage properly arranged, it seems to me that we are very derelict if we do not follow it up with whatever means is necessary to make the streets passable for the citizens of Washington and the people who come here, and I hope it will be done.

I strongly commend the disposition of the District Committee in this regard, and hope that something may occur which will relieve us of the embarrassment which has confronted us during the last ten days.

In this connection, I should like to ask a ques-Mr. LODGE. tion of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. A good deal of the bad condition of the streets of Washington after a snowfall is owing to the imperfect cleaning of the sidewalks by those who are responsible for them. House holders, as a rule, clean the sidewalks fairly well, though not very well, but nothing is done to clear the sidewalks in front of the houses that are not occupied that are for rent, or in front of lots that are unimproved or vacant lots with no houses upon them. That is possible in every part of the city and country and makes the sidewalks in many places as bad for passengers as are the roadways.

I do not know whether there is here an ordinance such as we have in most of the other cities, compelling the cleaning of sidewalks by the owners of adjacent lots. If there is no such ordinance, there ought to be one, and it ought to be enforced if there is one now in existence. I should be very much obliged if the Senator from New Hampshire could tell me whether there is such an ordinance or, if there is not, why there should not be one.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, replying to the Senator's interrogatory, I will say that we have been recently endeavor-ing to find a remedy for the condition of things that is being complained of. In 1895 a bill was passed upon this subject, which answered the purpose in part, but not wholly. In 1897 it was amended, and a bill very elaborate and very strict in its terms was made into law.

I do not remember exactly, Mr. President, when the question of the constitutionality of an act of this kind first arose in a State of the Union; but I do remember that in my own city, where we had a law requiring the owners of abutting property to clear sidewalks, the issue was made some years ago—ten years ago, I think—and the supreme court of the State of New Hampshire declared the law to be unconstitutional, saying that it was the duty of the municipality to care for the sidewalks as well as the streets of the city. While I very greatly regretted that, as did every citizen of the little city of Concord, N. H., we are now laboring under that disability and we are not having the sidewalks cleared as well as we were while the law was in operation.

The law of 1897 was contested here. It went to the courts of the District of Columbia, and the lower court and the court of appeals declared that law to be unconstitutional. The comor appears declared that tak to be disconstitutional. The commissioners then undertook, by police regulation, similar to an ordinance in other cities, to accomplish the desired result. That was again carried to the courts, and was declared unconstitutional. We have had during the past three or four years other bills before our committee. Two years ago a bill was prepared—I think by the corporation counsel—and was introduced by the chairman of the committee. It was submitted to the lawyers of that committee. After struggling with it for several months, as I recall the matter, they orally reported that they did not see how they could formulate a bill that would be any more likely to stand the test of the courts than the act of 1897, and so no action was taken.

There is now a bill before the committee on this very sub-It was referred by the chairman to the subcommittee on the judiciary, composed of very good lawyers, and, as I understand the matter, the corporation counsel was asked by that committee to formulate a bill, and I think I have that bill in my hands. It has come to me indirectly that the subcommittee are now giving consideration to the bill, but they are not encouraged in the hope that the bill, as prepared by the corporation counsel, which is now before them, will stand the test of the courts, any more than the act of 1897 did.

Therefore we are in this position, Mr. President, that the courts have declared unconstitutional the bills that we have heretofore passed, and the lawyers of that committee, at leastand I have an impression that the Judiciary Committee at one time had this matter under consideration-have not yet been able to agree upon a bill which, in their judgment, will stand the test that will be made when it is appealed to the courts of the District.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. While the subcommittee are thrashing out the question of constitutionality, is it not possible for Congress to make an appropriation sufficient to meet such an emergency?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is just what Congress is proposing When the recent storm came there was a very small amount of money available to the commissioners to do this work. They exhausted that money, and then they were estopped from doing anything further; at least they thought they were. But two or three days ago they concluded to take chances, and they put a force on the streets-which I think they might well have done at an earlier day—and they cleaned the streets and paid for it from some other appropriation, trusting to Congress to reimburse them.

Now, what the committee proposes to do, if Congress will sustain them in doing that thing, is to eliminate this little appropriation for the removal of snow and ice, to make a sufficient appropriation for the cleaning of the streets, including the removal of snow and ice, and to make it large enough to enable the commissioners to take the money out of that fund, and when a snowstorm comes rid the streets of the disagreeable condition that always follows.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If it is not annoying to the Senator, I should like to inquire as to the methods of getting the street-cleaning department at work. He said, after considerable effort and some misgiving, they were able to get them to They must have had some encouragement that they would have proper appropriations to meet the expense that would be incurred.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know, Mr. President, that the ommissioners had any encouragement—

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. In one moment. I do not know that the commissioners had any encouragement, except that they took the chance of doing this work in the belief that Congress at some later time would care for them, so far as the expenditure of the money was concerned, as doubtless Congress will do. Now, I yield to the Senator from Ne-

Mr. BURKETT. I should like, then, to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire upon that line that Congress has always been very ready to make a special appropriation for cleaning up the snow and ice, and that every winter one or two, or more, special appropriations have been made. I remember that such appropriations have always been passed by Congress very quickly—generally the same day they have been asked for.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; we have been doing that work by piecemeal in former years. It has been rather an absurd pro-When a snowstorm came, we have passed a joint resolution appropriating money, and that took several days. Sometimes Congress was not in session for two or three days. Congress has responded; but in the general appropriation bill, if the Senator will go back and examine that bill for several years, he will find that the Senate has made an appropriation probably sufficiently large to care for this matter. It has, however, been lost in conference, and the Senator from Nebraska knows that the Senate can not help that; but the disposition is, I will say to the Senator and to the Senate, on the part of the committee having something to do with this matter at least, to have the thing so arranged, and a sufficient appropriation made at this Congress, so that we shall not hereafter have the reproach upon us that we have recently had, so far as the condition of the streets is concerned. I assure the Senate that the Committee on the District of Columbia has a very earnest desire not to have a repetition of what has recently occurred in that regard.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I will say, since hearing the observations of the Senator from New Hampshire, that I have been a Member of both branches of Congress and have considered this matter in both branches. But what I did intend to call the Senator's attention to was that Congress had never overlooked the necessity of affording some means for cleaning the streets on such occasions as the present. It has been the policy of Congress in the past not to appropriate the entire amount in a lump sum so as to tie up an unusually large amount of the District money at any particular time, for Congress is always in session during the snow season and can respond quickly. It has been the policy of Congress in the past, and I do not think Congress in this respect is subject to criticism to the extent I have sometimes heard, because, before the first day's work inaugurated by the District is completed, an appropriation has always been made to pay for the work.

I want to say to the Senator from Michigan that, if he will give this matter attention, he will find out, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] has suggested, that it is a pretty serious problem just how far the District is going to clean off snow and ice from the streets. It is all right to talk about cleaning off the snow and ice from the streets if you confine it to a few streets; but to provide for a wholesale cleaning would, in my opinion, be very expensive upon the District and more than the taxpayers would care to stand.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Nebraska will certainly appreciate the fact that the situation which has confronted the people of the District for the last ten days is simply disgraceful. I do not believe there is a county seat in any county in the United States that has not given more attention to the convenience and comfort of its citizens with reference to the conditions of their streets and walks during the last ten days than has the National Capital. I think the conditions have been simply disgraceful. You build your sidewalks and construct your streets and rear your statues and monuments and plant your gardens, and then ask people to go around to them through mud and slush and ice and dirt almost up to their knees. I think it is most reprehensible. With all due respect to those in authority, I do not believe that it is a proper system. If it were a proper system, this condition of affairs would not exist. I do not believe enough thought has been given the subject; certainly proper initiative is lacking. Nothing was done at all until some Senator intimated that if the commissioners did something they would be cared for. I think that is outrageous. There ought to be a fund assembled somewhere which would be available for such emergency as may arise in the National Capital.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska will not differ with the Senator from Michigan as to the undesirable condition of the streets of Washington for the last week or ten days. However, I do want to suggest to the Senator from Michigan this thought: That the committee and Congress stand between the taxpayers, who are complaining because of their burden, and the people who are complaining because the streets are not kept more free from snow and ice. Congress has during all these years been very careful not to go so far either one way or the other as to merit the disapproval of careful, thinking people.

During the last week, as I think the Senator from Michigan will admit, there have been very unusual conditions. Since I have been in Washington I do not recall a winter when such conditions have prevailed as those of the last week or ten days. Usually in Washington when a snowstorm comes, by taking care of the gutters and cross walks, within a day or two, or three, at most, nature comes to our relief and puts the streets in very good shape.

Then let me call the attention of the Senator to another

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have been much touched, Mr. President, by the solicitude of Congress for the people of the District of Columbia displayed by the Senator from Nebraska. It seems to me that this solicitude might be manifested in some more liberal form of government for the District. It is just possible that if the people here had a more liberal form of government, some representation of their own, and some right to regulate their own taxation, they might be able to devise some scheme for cleaning the streets that would be satisfactory.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator from Michigan may want to run off into all these various things in reference to the municipal government of the District-

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator from Michigan, who is not on the Committee on the District of Columbia, and who has not these great responsibilities on his shoulders to any extent, if he has succeeded in formulating a new form of government for the District of Columbia that he could submit to that committee?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; but I think I could in fifteen minutes devise some plan for cleaning the streets, at a fair cost, that would be a great improvement over that which prevails.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator could do that if he had-the money to do it with.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me just one word-

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think I could do it on my credit, and I think the Government could do it on its credit. Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is fortunate in that respect, Mr. President, but that is not the way municipalities do business.

I want to say, in response to the criticism of the District Commissioners by the Senator from Michigan, that when the storm came they had exhausted the money on hand that had been granted to them by Congress for the purpose of cleaning the streets of snow and ice. Then they stopped; but recently they have taken the chance, hoping that Congress would reimburse them for an expenditure that they ought not to have been compelled to make.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, just a word further. I want to say to the Senator from Michigan, in response to his suggestion that in about fifteen minutes, as I understood him over here, he could create some better scheme of government or something of that sort, that that is about the consideration that is usually given to these questions by the people who do the most criticising.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I can not allow the Senator from Nebraska to put me in the attitude of saying that I could devise and formulate a system of government for the District of Columbia in fifteen minutes. That was not my statement; but when I was a boy I had considerable experience in cleaning snow off the sidewalks, and I think, in fifteen minutes, with a little help, that some scheme might be devised that would save the District from the disgraceful condition it has endured during the last few days.

Mr. BURKETT. So, Mr. President, it is the snow the Senator is going to get off in fifteen minutes instead of a plan for a different form of government for the District of Columbia.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes. Mr. TILLMAN. I want to say, as an evidence of the interest which is being taken in this matter, that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which has the District appropriation bill under consideration, has just had about an hour's chat with the commissioners on the subject. We were informed that the regulation, which used to obtain here when I was keep-ing house seven, eight, or ten years ago, requiring each house-holder to clean in front of his own premises immediately after a storm, has been knocked out by the court, and we are told that the police regulation on the same matter was resisted and also knocked out by the court. Therefore, we are face to face with the proposition that either the District government will do the cleaning or it will not be done, and, considering the fact that the Government of the United States pays one half of the expenditures of the District and the residents of the District pay only the other half, while we know that if left to the individual effort of householders or renters or owners to clean the sidewalks in front of their own doors, that would be an individual expense, but if the Government undertakes the whole thing the individuals will all stop. So it would resolve itself at last into the proposition whether the Government shall pay half of it or a few householders, who are interested in keeping their premises clean, shall bear that expense, and then those of us who have to walk the streets shall have to wade through slush and moisture.

I agree with the Senator that present conditions are disgraceful. In other cities I have visited, they use horsepower, snow plows, or one appliance or another which would facilitate at a minimum of cost the removal of snow from the sidewalks very shortly after a storm. Here nobody does anything now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want to say—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina that if the householder has been derelict and has not cleaned off his sidewalk, that criticism goes to one class of people only, but I think the Senator from South Carolina will agree with me that during the last ten days the most inconvenient and disgraceful part of the whole dirty business has been in the street itself, where no way was provided for the melting snow to get to the sewers, and it was a very difficult thing to get about and cross the streets at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Crossing from one sidewalk to another, where the sidewalk itself was reasonably comfortable, has been the most disagreeable part of the work in Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think so. Mr. TILLMAN. I agree to that. I agree that it is a disgraceful situation, and I am willing, as one member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, to provide, either by an independent bill or by an amendment on some appropriation bill, for a thorough system of cleaning the sidewalks and removing the snow at the crossings from one sidewalk to another, so that people who have to walk can get about without getting their feet wet.

I am glad the Senator has brought this matter to the attention of the Senate, and I hope when a reasonable remedy may be suggested by the committee which may take it in handthe Committee on the District of Columbia or the subcommit-tee of the Appropriations Committee having charge of the Dis-trict of Columbia appropriation bill—if the House sits down on it, we will stand up and say to the House "we will not sub-mit," and that we shall fight it out and see who can stand fighting the longest.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I merely want to say in conclusion, as I was about to say when the Senator from Michigan interrupted me, that, so far as I am concerned, I never had any doubt in my mind but that the District authorities have the right to use, in taking care of the snow and ice. the fund provided for cleaning the streets, and, as I understand, that fund is the one which has been recently drawn upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator that the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that they have not that right.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I understand that that is the case, and, in that event, of course it will be necessary to amend the law by granting that authority. The practice of the commissioners has been, when a snowstorm comes, instead of keeping their forces at work, as it has always seemed to me they had a right to do, they have suspended the work and come to Congress for special appropriations to do that special work. Instead of providing for keeping the streets clean all the year round, we provide in a general appropriation bill simply for sweeping the streets, and when these emergencies come the commissioners withdraw their entire force at work and ask Congress for special legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I think is acceptable to the Senator having the bill in charge.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. After line 9, on page 2, it is proposed to insert:

For additional amount required, fiscal year 1909, for salaries of teachers and janitors of night schools, including teachers of industrial, commercial, and trade instruction; and teachers and janitors of night schools may also be teachers and janitors of day schools, $5,500, one-half of which shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hesitate to make a suggestion which may be regarded as a criticism of the grammatical expression of the committee. Nevertheless, I suggest to the chairman of the committee that certain words used on page 7 are wholly unnecessary or confusing. In lines 8, 9, and 10 it says:

And the printing for the Supreme Court shall be done by the printer it may employ, unless it shall otherwise order.

I suggest to the Senator from Maine that the words "unless it shall otherwise order" are wholly unnecessary or might possibly involve authority to the Supreme Court to violate a contract with the printer.

Mr. HALE. This provision is the same that has been in the law for years,

Mr. CULBERSON. That may be true, and I am sure it is if the Senator states it, but when it is provided that the printing for the Supreme Court may be done by whatever printer it may employ, I do not see any use to add "unless it shall otherwise order.

Mr. BURKETT. That is to prevent subletting, as I understand. I observed that reading, but I understand it is put in for the purpose of preventing subletting of this printing. It is done by the man employed, unless otherwise ordered, so he can not sublet the printing.

Mr. HALE. That may be.

Mr. CULBERSON. The court can control that in the contract. I make no motion, but I think the words are wholly unnecessary.

necessary. It is mere tautology.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to obtain a little information, if I can. I have sent for the report on this bill, but I do not find the information I desire. For instance, on page 5, commencing in line 15, there is an item:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation "Laboratory, Department of Agriculture," including each and every object authorized by law and specified in the appropriation of $760,000 under this title in the "Act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909," approved May 23, 1908, $100,000.

I should like to know, if the Senator in charge of the bill or any other Senator can give me the information, whether or not any part of that sum is to be applied to the payment of this board of consulting scientific experts who have been making investigations and determinations in regard to pure food.

Mr. HALE. I do not know, and I have not asked that question. This is based upon the statute of last year, found in the appropriation bill, pages 4 and 5, and the departments regularly call for this deficiency to meet their requirements. How they have expended it I have not gone into on this bill. But I will say to the Senator that is one of the things covered by the resolution of the Senate, and also in the House, appointing committees which are now taking into consideration these very appropriations. It is not limited to the Secret Service of the Treasury Department, as the Senator knows, but applies to all these large appropriations, and the committees intend to and these large appropriations, and the committees intend to secure, if they can, from the departments just the kind of information the Senator requests. But we did not on this bill, which is an urgent bill, go into those questions.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that the item is rather a large one in a deficiency appropriation bill, and the original appropriation was also very large. My mind, doubtless in common with many others, has been put upon inquiry by the appointment of this board of consulting scientific experts to pass finally on the pure-food decisions of the chief chemist.

Mr. President, a word may not be out of place in connection with this matter, because I think the minds of Senators will be directed to it in the near future. We absolutely refused, in enacting the pure-food law, to consider favorably the proposition of establishing standards by legislation. The difference between the bill that came back to us and the bill that we sent out of this body rested largely on that question, and I am quite jealous that what we declined to do directly we shall not be found to be doing indirectly. It was the spirit of the pure-food bill that the courts should determine these questions and that no other definition than that of the courts should constitute a rule of action under the law; and yet I find every day almost some statement in the papers that some board or some com-mittee has issued its edict as to what shall and what shall not be permissible under the pure-food law.

If we sit idly by and allow the practice to drift in this direction, we might as well have accepted that proposition. It was the presence of that principle in the pure-food bill that as much as anything else held it back in Congress for almost a quarter of a century. People would not submit to the proposition that we should establish standards by legislation. The but I can not yield any further.

people who intelligently considered that measure demanded that each case should stand upon its own facts, and when the Senate expressed its final conclusion the law was so written. I want to know by what authority this board comes into existence, and I want to know what authority it claims for its conclusions.

I see that the paper says that it will probably result in displacing one of the executive officers of the Government, and that the board will be substituted for an executive officer authorized by law for whom we have been making provision year after year. If that is to be, I think we should take it into consideration when we are asked to open the Treasury of the United States and give them an extra hundred thousand dollars upon a very indefinite statement of the purpose for which it is to be used. We have already given them something over $700,000 in the appropriation for this year, and I may be wrong in thinking that the additional expense has been caused by this unauthorized board, and if it is so, I think the Senate would be interested in knowing it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 5, after line 22, it is proposed to insert .

To supply the deficiency in the quota of vegetable and other valuable seed authorized to be furnished each Senator and Representative, the sum of $30,000, which the Secretary of Agriculture is required to pur-

Mr. HALE. I am constrained to make the point of order that this has not been reported upon as an amendment by any committee of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and therefore sustains it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the calendar under Rule VIII, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the omnibus claims bill for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bow-man" and "Tucker" acts.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for a moment to pass a little bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KEAN. It will take but a moment. The bill is to correct a military record.

Mr. FULTON. Let the omnibus claims bill first be laid before the Senate

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and the "Tucker" acts.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to pass a small bill. It is to grant an honorable discharge. It is a bill which was ordered to be reported last May, and by some neglect it was not reported. It will take but a moment.

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

THOMPSON B. POLLARD.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6550) granting an honorable discharge to Thompson B. Pollard.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that Thompson B. Pollard shall hereafter be held to have been honorably discharged as a second lieutenant of Battery D, First New Jersey Light Artillery Volunteers, on February 19, 1864, and that an honorable discharge be issued to him by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

"DESCENDANTS OF THE SIGNERS."

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FULTON. I can not yield further.
Mr. BULKELEY. It will take but a moment.
Mr. FULTON. If it is a short bill, I will yield for this one,

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 8302) to incorporate the "Descendants of the Signers." Mr. FULTON. That is a long bill.

Mr. BULKELEY. No; it is not. It will take but a moment. Mr. FULTON. There were a good many names in it the last time I saw it.

Mr. BULKELEY. It is a comparatively short bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 6, after the name "Braxton," to strike out "B." and insert "D.," and in line 7, before the words "West Virginia," to strike out "Charleston" and insert "Charlestown," so as to read:

and insert "Charlestown," so as to read:

That for the purpose of aiding in the preservation of historical records and to help educate the people in love and patriotism for country, and to mark and protect the last resting places of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and generally to collect instructive material regarding the life and works of all the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and for other patriotic purposes in line with the work above indicated, Albert McClellan Mathewson, of New Haven, Conn.; John Quincy Adams Johnson, of Yonkers, N. Y.; Hollins N. Randolph, of Atlanta, Ga.; Henry Morris, of Philadelphia, Pa.; John Calvert, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Braxton D. Gibson, of Charlestown, W. Va.; William Shields McKean, of Washington, D. C.; George Washington Dame, of Baltimore, Md.; and their associates, who shall be members in good standing of the Descendants of the Signers at the time when this act takes effect, and those thereafter associated with them and their successors, be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate of the District of Columbia under the name of "The Descendants of the Signers."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he has had any calculation made as to the probable number of Descendants of the Signers?

Mr. BULKELEY. I have not investigated that subject. I think they are very numerous.

Mr. KEAN. I should think the Senator would want to have an approved list of them, so that everyone would not be admitted as a descendant.

Mr. BULKELEY. Would the Senator from New Jersey want to take the responsibility of examining the genealogical history of the members of the proposed society?

Mr. KEAN. No.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and "Tucker" acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be

The Secretary. On page 46, an amendment by Mr. Hopkins, to strike out lines 1 and 2 in the following words:

To Plymouth Frazier, jr., of Liberty County, $122.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I have already stated my objections to the amendment; not this morning, but when the bill was being considered before. I hope the amendment will be

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 46, after line 18, to insert:

To Mary M. Banks, heir of Henry Banks, $15,375.

To Archibaid A. Griggs, administrator of the estate of Archibald P. Griggs, deceased, late of Cobb County, $760.

To Albion W. Knight and others, rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philips Episcopal Church of Atlanta, Ga., $800.

To trustees of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of Marietta, Ga., $425.

To trustees of Jerusalem Evangelical Lutheran Church, Ebenezer, Ga., $225

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how many church claims there are in this bill?

Mr. FULTON. There is no segregation of those claims. I think the "southern war claims," so called, probably aggregate $600,000 or thereabouts, and simply estimating, I should say that over half easily are church claims. This, of course, is a mere estimate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I meant my inquiry to include what the general nature of the claims was, whether for church property taken-

Mr. FULTON. I should have answered the Senator on that The general nature of the church claims is for compensation for property used by the army. More largely than any other element is that of rent for use and occupation. There any other element is that of rent for use and occupation. are some claims for materials taken and used-for instance, the boards, flooring torn up, ceiling taken down, and all that sort of thing. In such cases the committee has allowed and reported compensation only at the rate of the value of the lumber-not the value in the edifice, but simply the value of the old lumber. We have not reported in favor of those claims when the property was destroyed by the army, excepting only a few of them, which, I have explained heretofore, crept into the bill, or rather into the first report, through an oversight and were stricken out on the second report; but because of the situation presented, the committee has agreed to put them back.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, it will not do to permit this bill to pass under the impression that of the aggregate amount appropriated—$2,299,000—any great portion is for the payment of southern claims of any character. There is not exceeding $300,000 in the bill which may be classed in that way. There is not

Mr. FULTON. Which can be classed how?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. As southern claims.

Mr. FULTON. I am quite certain the Senator is mistaken about there being only $300,000 of southern claims.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. About $600,000 the Senator from Massachusetts states.

Mr. FULITON. That is what I said. That was my estimate, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It leaves three or four times as much as $600,000 for claims of other kinds. I think myself if there is going to be a southern claims bill it ought to be a separate measure, and somebody ought to be prepared to explain the character and nature of each one of the claims. None has been admitted to this bill, however, until after it had been adjudicated by the Court of Claims, a tribunal created by law for the specific purpose of determining claims of this kind.

For myself I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the war ought officially to be declared at an end, and there ought to be a time fixed when these claims shall no longer be presented. It is perfectly obvious to anyone who knows anything about the situation how difficult it is to portray to any court, with that certainty which is necessary to form the basis of judicial action, the conditions that then existed. I have no doubt that many fraudulent claims have been adjudicated, and I have not any doubt that in nearly every case the very best the court has been able to do is to make a guess at the situation.

Now, as the Government has proceeded upon the theory that it would attempt to ascertain the extent of the liability and dispose of claims of that kind, I feel it would be a recession from its position at this time and this hour to undertake to require, in support of any particular item in the bill, an explanation which would go behind the action of the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims have been diligent; I think they have been exceedingly strict, particularly in the matter of church claims. Such claims are not presented here as matters of strict right. They come here as the result of the sentiment developed in the Senate under the leadership of the late Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, which is a character of benevolence. They are to be treated and disposed of on that basis. They stand upon an entirely different footing from strict claims for supplies furnished to the Government or supplies taken from loyal persons in the South and devoted to government purposes. For that reason I believe the Committee on Claims has failed fully to comprehend and fully to recognize the spirit of liberality that lay at the foundation of the sentiment as developed and caused to be adopted in this body by Mr. Hoar.

I have felt disposed to say this much. I wish to get two statements in the RECORD. The first is that I think the bill has erroneously been denominated as a "southern claims bill." the next place, I believe that a different rule should be applied to church claims than to others. The third announcement is that I hope an early day will be fixed when the presentation of such claims will cease, and we will be rid of the annoyance of having to stand up here and make statements such as we make now.

There is nothing more annoying to the Senators from the Southern States than to be continually dogged every session here about these claims by the distressed individuals in the South. They are not by any means a very large class and under all the circumstances not a particularly influential class. Some of us hold opinions similar to those expressed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money]. But I hold to the lawyer's position in the matter, that if any claim has any merit in it, it ought to have been presented and pressed long before forty-three or forty-four years have expired.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I think the Secretary has read the last item of the amendment on page 47, beginning at line 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The item has not yet been read.

The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

To Clementine Vaughan, administratrix of the estate of William M. Vaughan, deceased, late of Putnam County, $1,901.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the following, to be added to the item just agreed to.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add, after line 7, on page 47: To Sarah Jane Bella, administratrix of the estate of James W. Bella, deceased, of Atlanta, $2,980.

To the trustees of the Missionary Baptist Church of Powder Springs,

To the trustees of the Missionary Baptist Church & Toward Spring, Ga., $650.

To the village of Graysville, Catoosa County, Ga., $650.

To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Powder Springs, Ga., $800.

To the trustees of the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church, of Ringgold, Ga., $400.

To Sabina Jones, of Pike County, $215.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. There is an amendment which needs correction on page 46, line 24. It reads:

To Albion W. Knight and others, rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philip's Episcopal Church, of Atlanta, Ga., $800.

Mr. FULTON. What is the amendment the Senator would suggest?

Mr. BACON. I desire to have the name of Albion Knight stricken out, owing to the fact that he is no longer connected with that church.

Mr. FULTON. The title was taken from the Court of Claims finding.

Mr. BACON. At the time the claim was presented he was rector of the church.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator send the amendment to the Secretary?

Mr. BACON. It is to strike out the words "Albion W. Knight and others" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philip's Episcopal Church, of Atlanta."

Mr. FULTON. I suggest to the Senator that those words are Mr. FULTON. I suggest to the Senator that those words are in, and that he strike out the words "Albion W. Knight and others." The language remaining is "rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philip's Episcopal Church, of Atlanta."

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator that there are two bills before me. One has those words in and the other has not.

Mr. FULTON. The one we are considering has those words in.

Mr. BACON. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the bill Order of Business 380—in the bill, Order of Business 380-

Mr. FULITON. Order of Business 421 is the one before us. Mr. BACON. In the bill Order of Business 380 the amount specified is $1,900, and in the bill Order of Business 421 the amount specified is $800.

Mr. FULTON. I will read from the report, page 38:

Mr. FULTON. I will read from the report, page 38:

During the war of the rebellion the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, took possession of and tore down and used the material of certain of the buildings belonging to St. Philip's Episcopal Church, to wit, the parsonage, two two-room cottages, and one office building, and used the material therefrom in the construction of quarters for the defendant's soldiers, which material was then and there reasonably worth the sum of $1,900, while the buildings as they stood before they were so taken possession of and torn down by the said military forces were reasonably worth the sum of $3,760.

In addition to the value of the buildings owned by the claimants so torn down, as aforesaid, the church building proper was injured by the use and occupation thereof by said military forces to the amount of $800.

I will say to the Senator that, my attention being called to it again, under the rules we have been applying, $1,900 should be inserted in addition to the $800, because I see that $1,900 was allowed for the value of the material in the building.

Mr. BACON. I will then ask that that change be made simply to conform to the bill as it appeared in the former print. Mr. FULTON. I move that "eight hundred" be stricken out before "dollars" and "two thousand seven hundred" be inserted. That will make it right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, line 26, before the word "dollars," strike out "eight hundred" and insert "two thousand seven hundred," so as to read "$2,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

Senator from Georgia will be stated.

Mr. BACON. Now, the former amendment proposed, striking out the name of Albion W. Knight, should be agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the

The Secretary. In line 24, strike out the words "Albion W. Knight and others" and insert "the," so that the paragraph will read:

To the rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philip's Episcopal Church, of Atlanta, Ga., $2,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 19, on page 48, Mr. FULTON. On page 48, after line 19, in the items under the heading "Illinois," I move to insert:

To Fannie Pemberton, of Golconda County, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULITON. Also in the items under "Illinois," on page 47, after line 8, I move to insert:

To Elijah Stannard, of Iroquois County, $210.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 51, in the items under the heading "Kansas," after line 21, to insert:

To regents of the University of Kansas, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, in the items under the heading "Kentucky," on page 54, after line 6, to insert:

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 6484.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Stephenson Taylor Teller Tillman Warner Warren Wetmore Burkett du Pont Flint Foraker Long McCreary McCumber Martin Burnham Carter Clapp Clark, Wyo. Clarke, Ark. Clay Crane Frazier Frye Fulten Gallinger Gamble Nixon Page Paynter Perkins

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] to strike out section 7 and in lieu thereof to insert what will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sec. 7. That interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum shall be allowed and entered in the pass book to the credit of each depositor once in each year, the same to be computed on such basis and under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe; but interest shall not be computed or allowed on any amount less than $1 or some multiple thereof: Provided, That the balance to the credit of any one person shall never be allowed to exceed $500, exclusive of accumulated interest.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are proceeding to the consideration of this bill with the assurance resting on the mind of every Senator that it is going to be a vain thing. It is not possible to enact this legislation at the present session. The bill involves a complete transformation of our governmental policy and incorporates in the fundamental law of the land principles that were never for a moment dreamed of by either the founders or those who have maintained this Government.

There is a practical side to this question that I have not heard discussed which must be apparent upon suggestion to everyone. While I do not intend to take up the bill for any extended consideration, I am impelled at this moment to suggest the absolute impossibility of making a measure like it applicable to a great country like ours. The bill is discussed not in the light of its merits and as it will affect our people, but as it might be applicable to the people of Germany, or England, or France, or some other country, between which country and ours the difference is so wide as to be immensurable; it is impossible to be spanned.

Every man is in sympathy with the principle of economy, with the opportunity and the practice of saving the earnings of the poor workingman or the rich; it makes no difference, but I can imagine this law enacted and I can see the city in which I live on pay day, at the end of the month, with $400,000 of a pay roll distributed among 4,000 men, and see them lined up in the front of the post-office to make these deposits under the provisions of the bill. I can see the post-office in that city receiving into its comparatively unprotected hands a sum of money that under any circumstances, according to the prophecies of those who are proposing this legislation, would be anywhere from one to three hundred thousand dollars. I can see the postmaster receiving it on Saturday after the banks have closed and undertaking to protect it with trembling and fear until the hour when the bank can relieve him of the responsibility. I can see the postmaster at Murray, 20 miles away from any national bank, receiving the deposits of those miners when they are paid at the end of the month, and then undertaking to transport that money in cash—because it must be in cash; it can not be in checks-across two ranges of mountains to find a national bank to put it in.

I am localizing this question for the more convenient purpose of illustration. I could name a dozen cities lying far back from the locality of national banks that would take in under this law all the way from $10,000 to $50,000 in money available to the robber as to the owner. I can see those men who receive their pay in checks drawn upon the banks at the near centers of business being compelled to send the checks, or take them for sooth, to the bank and exchange them for cash receivable by the Post-Office Department and then go back to the post-office and make their deposits. I am considering the practical side of this legislation and not the theoretical side.

Then I see these men line up—100, for instance—in front of the post-office at any hour to make a deposit, the clerical transaction to be performed before they can leave, each in their order, away from their business, away from their homes. They must take a shift off from their work in order to do this banking business with the postmaster. To wait on 100 men would take from three to five hours, with any clerical force that could do business at the post-office window to dispose of it.

Take a country like England, or Scotland, or France, or Germany, comparable in size with the State of Pennsylvania; you could put it inside the State of Idaho and have a good-sized State around the margin. It may be that in a country like that a scheme such as this could be made applicable and useful. This proposed legislation is based upon sentiment. You are

This proposed legislation is based upon sentiment. You are going to constitute somebody the guardian of a certain portion of the people on the presumption that they are not capable of taking care of themselves and their money. There is a certain element in this Government that is always trying to do that. They are acting on the assumption that the American people are not capable of taking care of their own business, and they want to constitute themselves their guardians; they want to protect them from the ills which rest only in imagination, and take their own business out of their own hands, and to take their children from them because they do not manage their children as they would manage theirs.

Mr. President, the Government of the United States should never—and I prophesy that it will never—borrow money of one man for the purpose of loaning it to another, and that is all that this bill amounts to. It is proposed to borrow money from the poor and loan it to the rich. No man can charge me with belonging to that class of men who undertake to array the rich against the poor, but I am talking of facts.

I do not want to gather in the pennies of the poor and make them a great fund—where? Where the poor can get it? Not for a moment. Have you noticed the provisions of this bill controlling the manner of recalling the money by the depositor? Why, he could not get his money back under a month when he wanted it. He does not own it; he has no title to it after he has deposited it. It is not even that class of control that a man has over his deposit in a bank. The bill says it shall become the public moneys of the United States when it is deposited, and the Constitution says that public moneys of the United States can be withdrawn only pursuant to an act of appropriation for that purpose.

How is Congress going to authorize by an appropriation act the repayment of this money to the depositor? He can not send his child down and say, "I want $4 to pay the grocery bill;" he can not send his wife around and say, "We want to withdraw a little of the money we have deposited here." To get it he must make a written application to the Government of the United States, and the Government must act upon such applications each of them separately—before he gets it. We will say he lives in our blessed State of Idaho. It has taken two weeks for the mail to go and come; and on the assumption that it would be taken up immediately in Washington and disposed of and a check made out and started back, it would take from ten days to two weeks. The fact is, that when this application to withdraw this money reaches Washington it must go through an auditing process; it must be determined whether this is the man or the woman or the child and whether the money is to their credit. Then, that being determined, through the clerical force in the department a draft will be sent to the party. The poor consider a draft against their deposit of $10 a large draft-it is large in proportion to their holdings, to their possessions—yet they have got to go through all of this to get it.

The Government is dealing with the petty question of interest upon these little deposits. What is the Government to do with them? Does it send this money out among the people? It has gathered it under the pretense that it is for the purpose of accomplishing a better distribution of it, giving it activity in the business world. It puts it in a national bank. A billion of dollars is the accepted estimate of this fund. A billion of dollars would be withdrawn from the control of its owners and placed in the national banks, to be loaned to those who have the confidence of the national banks. Who are they? Who are the people who go to national banks for money? They are men of large affairs. This money is, therefore, permanently withdrawn from that class to whom it belongs and transferred to another class of people. For what? At the rate of interest that the national bank elects to charge.

Now, who is benefited by this? The owners of this vast sum of money, who would number millions? It is estimated that 15,000,000 people would be depositors in these banks. The owners of that money are deprived of the use of it, except as they go through this long process of withdrawing it. The banks would be enabled to create any kind of a panic at any time they wanted, for they do not need to loan this money, except as it is profitable to them.

There is another question. How are you going to make the bankers accept this money? Suppose a banker says, as a bank officer recently said in my presence in speaking of money, "Money is a drug with us; we are maintaining a marble palace, expensive clerks, and beautiful vaults to protect the property of other people at our expense." Withdraw that vast sum of money from circulation for thirty days, and what would be the effect on business? Why, a year ago last fall the withdrawal of half that much money from circulation caused a panic, and it is withdrawn absolutely from circulation until the national banks have found a use for it. It rests in their vaults as money of the United States.

The vast sum of money that would be in the hands of postmasters between the time they received it and the time they turned it over to the banks is another important question for consideration. It is a fair estimate that the bonds fairly to be required from postmasters would amount to more than $200,000,000. Where are they going to get them? Where is there to be obtained $200,000,000 to make good the credit of the postmasters who are carrying this vast sum of money? No provision is contained in this bill, so far as I have read it, requiring the national banks to give any additional security for the use of this money.

Mr. President, the money is safer where it is, in the hands of the owners, and it is more useful to the people; it circulates more freely and more generally. The man who has his pay roll in his pocket at the end of the month, with his check for $104, is very apt to do some business with it with somebody. He will do more business with it than the bank that he turns it over to does. He certainly will do more business with it than the Government of the United States will do. The very fact that he has the money is an incentive to use it. is a slander upon the intelligence of the people to say that it is an incentive to abuse it. Where there is one man who drinks and gambles and wastes his money there are a hundred men who do not; there are a hundred men who educate their families and build homes and maintain their rank in civilization. It is a slander upon the best element of the American people to say that they need such guardianship over them as is implied by this legislation. I hesitated to arrive at the conclusions that now actuate me because there was such a sentiment behind this measure, and a declaration made by a committee, after four hours of partial consideration, that undertook to direct the Congress of the United States what they should do with the weight of responsibility resting upon them. It was with hestitation that I found myself compelled to take the stand against this proposed legislation, which might be termed "mock heroic" legislation, and the declaration of a generally accepted principle, a principle that no man can contend against, and then employing a false method for the applitend against, and then employing a raise method for the application of that principle.

Where would the banks send this money—this billion dollars? Where would they find a market for it? They must find a market for it, or they could not pay interest on it. They would send it where they could sell it for the highest price—into the speculative market. It is the speculative market that pays the highest price for money. The world of investment does not. It refuses to pay more than from 3 to 4 or 4½ per cent, but the speculative world will pay any price for its salvation for twenty-four hours.

Mr. President, I think it is a waste of time to consider this legislation. The American people expect us to take the responsibility for legislation, and I have no fear of going to any constituency, and, in reply to their question "What did you do with the pledge in the Republican platform for a postal savings bank bill," I would say, "We acted upon it and found it not for the best interests of the people." "Why did you pledge it?" The Compages of the United States it?" The Congress of the United States never pledges itself to legislation in the performance of its conscientious duty. It acts upon the wisdom that results from reflection. It has no right at the beginning of the consideration of a great question to announce elsewhere the conclusion of wisdom in its consideration. So that I may now say with propriety that I think the time would be wasted in the consideration of this measure to the exclusion of other questions that are of vastly greater importance.

I have spent much thought and time upon the consideration of whether or not this fund, when collected, could be used as a basis for issue. I have thought, in view of the fact that it is almost impossible to devise a financial system of issue with a satisfactory basis, that we might possibly use this money and issue circulation against it; but I have not been able to satisfy my mind to the extent that I am willing to support that proposition.

There is the question of double issue; there is the question of expansion. I hope some Senator may find a method by which, if we are to gather this fund, it may be made the basis of issue; but I have not been able to put upon paper any proposal that was satisfactory to my own mind. It is the only thing, if it can be done, that would save this measure and give it any justification in the minds of thinking people. When the great working class of this country discover that they have deposited their money in the post-offices, to be returned to them only under the embarrassment I have suggested, they will rise up and condemn the wisdom of their Representatives in the Congress of the United States who are responsible for such legislation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. In what part of this bill does the Senator from Idaho find that regulation with regard to the withdrawal of a depositor's funds?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not at the moment a copy of the bill before me, though I have made myself somewhat familiar with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator will find in section 9 all there is in the bill on that subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have now a copy of the bill, and read from section 9:

SEC. 9. Any depositor may withdraw the whole or any part of the funds deposited to his or her credit, with the accrued interest, after complying with such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

When the Senator asks me what law there is on the subject, I would say there is none provided; and the failure to provide a law is one of the particular things that I object to in all legislation. This thing of simply throwing legislation up in the air and saying to some executive department "Catch it and mold it into form and apply it," does not meet with my approval.

Mr. CUMMINS. I thought it was possible the Senator was under the impression that there was in the bill a provision such as he suggested for formal application to the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HEYBURN. There was such a provision in the bill, but it was cut out the other day when I was absent. I left it in the bill when I went out to Idaho, but I found it eliminated when I came back. But it is in the bill, as is every suggestion that has been made, whether temporarily eliminated or not in the minds of those who are advocating this proposed legislation,

Mr. President-Mr. CARTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Section 9, or that portion of it read by the Senator, was in the bill when reported to the Senate. That has not been changed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let me read it again. There is no difficulty about this:

All withdrawals of deposits must be made in even dollars unless the account shall be closed—

A man could not draw four dollars and a half to pay his grocery bill. He would have to draw $5 and redeposit the 50 cents, I suppose-in which event the depositor's pass book shall be surrendered-

That is, if he draws it all out-and the Postmaster-General shall, by appropriate regulations, enforce especial care in the repayment of trust funds in order that the interests of the beneficiaries thereof may be protected as far as practicable.

Well, there is just one measure of honesty for trust funds and other funds on deposit with a public officer. One is not more sacred than the other in the hands of the public. It is all right, if you are making a political speech, to talk about trust funds and their sacred character, and all that; but in making law, there is just one law for all the people.

Repayments to depositors shall be made under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

Section 10 provides:

That postal savings depository funds are hereby declared to be public moneys, and subject to the safeguards and preferences provided by statute therefor.

They are made exempt from execution. They are taken out from under the control of the legislation of the State. A child 10 years of age may be given $500 by his parents, and it may be deposited in his name at the rate of a hundred dollars a month, and it is thus saved from the liability that the parent bears to the business world. A man with 10 children could have $5,000 in this fund, outside of his own deposits and those perhaps of his wife, that would be exempt from execution. are taken out from under all provisions of the community property law of the State of Idaho and of many other States. They are not returned for taxation; they are not liable for taxation. So that this bill carries in it an exemption from liability to the individual that is greater than any exemption provided for by any law in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. On the point of exempting this money from taxation, I desire to ask the Senator a question. In my State money deposited in savings banks is taxed; also money on hand on the 1st day of April of each year is subject to taxation. I want to ask the Senator whether or not it is proper for the Government of the United States, which can exempt its own bonds from taxation, I admit, to invade the States and provide a system whereby money in the hands of the people can be deposited in the post-offices and exempt that money from taxation in the several States? Not being a lawyer, I am not, of course, prepared to pass upon it, but I ask the Senator if, as a lawyer, he really thinks that is one of the functions of the General Government?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer that briefly. The provision in this bill which says that the character of this money shall be converted from that of private ownership to a public fund would enable the Government to say that the public fund, which would be this money under another name, should not be taxed; but the individual, under the state law, could be taxed for the receipt he holds, which represents the money and which is property

Mr. HALE. Showing his interest in it.

Mr. HEYBURN. And a thing of value. That is the legal status of it, I think, correctly stated. Now, here is a provision in connection with that thought:

Sec. 3. That accounts may be opened and deposits made in any postal savings depository established under this act by any person of the age of 10 years or over in his or her own name.

In order to avoid the taxation of the credit which the parent would have by virtue of holding a receipt or certificate, he deposits it in the name of his children, many or few. Under this provision, the court probably would hold that the parent had no property right in that deposit, and it was therefore not taxable; so that the deposits of children would not be taxable.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Idaho kindly restate his construction of section 10, wherein it is sought to exempt these funds from taxation?

Mr. HEYBURN. I was referring to section 3 in this instance.

Mr. CUMMINS. Section 10, I think, is the section that covers that subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will refer to section 10:

Sec. 10. That postal savings depository funds are hereby declared to be public moneys and subject to the safeguards and preferences provided by statute therefor.

There is no embarrassment about that, because the money is paid into the Treasury of the United States; that is, into the representative of the Treasury, which is the depository selected, probably a national bank. Of course that money would not be subject to taxation, but the thing that stood for that money in the hands of the depositor would be property and might be taxed if the party were of age and could be represented upon the tax roll.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call the Senator's attention to line 3, on page 8:

Such funds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States or any State

Does not the Senator understand that that means to exempt the funds in the hands of the depositor?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it could not mean that in law, because the character of the money being declared by the same act would run all through and indicate the purpose of the act that the money shall become a part of the public funds of the United The money would be cash when it left the hands of its States. owner. It would in a moment change ownership by the act of depositing it.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is fair that the Senator from Idaho while discussing this bill should know that there is an amendment about to be presented which seeks to strike out section 10.

Mr. HEYBURN. The entire section?
Mr. CUMMINS. The entire section.
Mr. HEYBURN. It has not come to my attention. It is merely an intention, I suppose, existing probably on the part of the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. It has been submitted and printed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know what it is proposed I do not know what it is proposed to substitute for section 10.

Mr. CUMMINS. Nothing. Mr. HEYBURN. I was discussing this bill as it stands with the amendments that have already been proposed. Section 10

After their receipt from depositors they shall be exempt from demand, garnishment, execution, attachment, seizure, or detention under any legal process against the depositor thereof.

I have in my mind a man who has 13 children competent to deposit under this bill, and I presume that there are many such men in this country, so that one could in a very few min-utes accumulate quite a fund that would be exempt from all of those things. He could do it perhaps in an hour, and thus avoid the liability.

Section 10 further provides that-

Such funds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States, or any State, county, or municipality.

You would withdraw a billion dollars from taxation. could, by the express terms of this bill, relieve a billion dollars from contributing to the cost of maintaining your governments, general and local. You would relieve that sum from the honest responsibility which it represents to the owner and to his creditors, those with whom he does business, and you would relieve him from the burden of taxation in order to do what? might be more widely disseminated among the class of people from whom it came? No; but that it might go into the national banks and be loaned in the markets where those institutions find the highest profit for their funds.

Where would all this money come from? It is said that it mes out of the hiding places. There is a vast amount of error comes out of the hiding places. There is a vast amount of error in regard to that statement. The people of the United States carry in their pockets every day, every hour, and every minute of every day and every year a billion dollars in money. I suppose this is an extra billion that they are to dig up from the hiding places.

What per cent of the people do you suppose hide their money in old crockery or imaginary safe places? Not one person in 100,000 in the United States does it. Not one person in 100,000 has money secreted in these imaginary places. The people of this generation put their money in savings institutions, Jocal banks or trust companies or what you please, or they carry it in their pockets. The money they carry in their pocket is based upon their estimate of the convenience that money will afford them, and they do not want to have to go to some depository when they want to use an ordinary sum of $10 or $15 or $20. They carry it with them. That is an accepted estimate in financial statistics.

I will tell you where these imaginary millions of dollars will come from. They will come from deposits already safely made with state and local banks and savings institutions, because of the sentiment that they are turning it over to the Government of the United States, and the Government of the United States is responsible for it; and you will draw from the deposits in that class of institutions and transfer the money to the national banks. If the Government were going to take this money into its own Treasury and issue certificates for circulation, the money would go back into some portion of the commercial world to do business with. I believe the owner of the money is the best custodian of it. There may be a few misers here and there; you read of them, one in a million, or a hundred thousand, or whatever it may be. Shall we change the whole policy of our Government because such conditions exist?

It was not my intention to discuss this question at all to-day, Mr. President. I had supposed that the bill would go over, as it has been going, at the hour of 2 o'clock. There are legal questions involved in the consideration of the measure which can not be separated from it, but I will not undertake the discussion of them to-day. I merely wanted to point out for the consideration of those who may participate in the debate upon this measure some of the objections that appear to my mind,

One-and I have finished-

No person connected with the Post-Office Department shall disclose to any person other than the depositor the amount of his or her deposit, unless directed so to do by the Postmaster-General.

That would simply abrogate the laws of every State in the To say you shall not have the power to reach the property of a debtor, to say that you shall not obtain the knowledge necessary in order to make good a judgment against the owner of the money, would be subversive of the laws of every State in It will be a secret fund that may amount the United States. to thousands of dollars, and in the hands of those who desire to conceal themselves financially it would amount to the maximum every time. It would be a little safety fund, laid away in the name of every child they had and of every member of their family, in units of $500. If you had a judgment against them and went to the bank, as you would in ordinary proceedings of garnishment, and served it with the process of the court directing it to answer whether or not it held funds to the credit of this man, the bank would say, "No; we can not do that under the law."

I know what would happen. The courts of the State would compel them to disclose it, because it is not within the power of the Federal Government to repeal the just statutes of a State made in pursuance of the constitutional rights of the State. Why lay the foundation for such conflict as this? Who are we that we should undertake to wrest from the people whom we represent the control of their property, which it was never intended that we should control at all? The purpose of our Government is to establish safe principles upon which the people may manage their own business and their own property and not to take it out of their hands and constitute ourselves their guardians.

As I suggested on the occasion of our last meeting, some make the mistake of thinking that they govern the people. There is nobody who governs the people of this country. The President of the United States does not govern the people, nor does Congress or the courts. They merely carry into effect the will of the people as expressed through their representatives; that is Sometimes it seems to me that we lift ourselves up onto an imaginary throne of power. In that hour of fancied power we do gross wrong to the people. We want to avoid it in this

Mr. President, there is too much disposition to fit and adjust the institutions of this country to those of European countries that are a playground for some of our citizens, who go there and become so infatuated with the luxury and with the conditions that surround them that they want to bring them home with them. They come home here, and the first thing they do is tell us how they do things in Europe. It was because we did not approve of the way they did things across the water that we separated ourselves from European ideas and European ways, and we do not want to drift back toward the shore-not one wave.

Mr. President, we are here to determine a government based upon the Constitution of the United States and upon that great Declaration which preceded it, based upon American conditions, based upon American methods. I care not whether France or Germany or England have postal savings banks or not. They gather up the pennies of the poor and use them as a part of the public moneys. The Bank of England is the clearing house of the Government of England. The Government of France clears through the Bank of France, and so with Germany and Italy. The relation that exists between the people of those countries and the Government is not comparable with the relations which exist between the people of this country and the Government. The relation that exists between the banks of England and France and Germany and Italy bears no relation whatever to the financial system of this country, and I trust to God it never will.

We do not want to accumulate this money for the use of the Government. We do not need it. We do not want the power to loan money to the Government of the United States that they may use it even for governmental purposes, much less for the purpose of loaning it out to some other man, whether rich or poor makes no difference in principle. I repeat, What country in the world ever borrows money from one of its citizens for the purpose of loaning it to another? ciple of government would justify such an act for one moment-to enter into a contract to borrow money of the humble citizens who work in the mill or the mine or the forest on the presumption that he is not capable of safeguarding it for himself and contracting to pay him interest, out of what fund? Suppose we take in a billion dollars and the national banks can not use more than five hundred millions of it; what are you going to do with the $500,000,000 that lay in the Treasury of the United States?

Pay interest on it? This bill provides that we shall. Upon what fund would the Government draw its voucher to pay in-terest on $500,000,000 thus collected? And why should we do it? Why should we borrow this money and take the chances of loaning it? Of course, if some plan can be worked out that will enable the Government to base an issue of currency upon this money, then the money might be in circulation through the ordinary means of distribution. But no such proposition has been suggested as yet.

Mr. President, as I have said before, I had not the slightest intention of speaking upon this question at the present time. I had intended that when I did speak upon it I would take up the legal phases of it and present them upon it I would take up the legal phases of it and present them upon the authorities—and there are authorities, decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that affect, control, and would abrogate this legislation, nullify it. I have myself sat in this body almost six years, and during that time have participated in the enactment of a number of laws that have been held to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States. I think we want to reduce the possibilities to the minimum, Mr. President. If this bill were enacted in the form in which it is proposed to-day it would not for a moment stand the test of the law.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I am under many obligations, as I am sure every Senator is, to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN for the candor and boldness heretofore wanting in connection with opposition to this bill. The opposition has been of the insidious, gum-shoe style. "Just wait and we will do something else first" has been the argument we have thus far encountered. Constitutional lawyers of great renown, of admitted and self-confessed ability, have been proposing from day to day to inundate us with an avalanche of authorities showing that this bill is wholly unconstitutional in its purpose and would be held void by the Supreme Court if enacted into law. thus far they have not graciously favored us with a citation, and we are apprehensive now that they will find themselves much confused in seeking the pat authorities to which they have so kindly referred in general terms.

The Senator from Idaho starts out with the conclusive statement that the proposed legislation is utterly impracticable as applied to this country; and he properly says to me that is the main proposition. He supported that proposition by drawing a pathetic picture of 4,000 miners in the Coeur d'Alene country standing in front of the post-office utterly unable to get their money deposited, and in view of the inability of that procession, immediately after receiving pay to deposit their money, it followed they should not be provided with any place to deposit

This conclusion would certainly be hailed with delight by the fellows conducting the faro banks and the hurdy-gurdy houses and the various alluring schemes through which the nimble pennies are pulled with unfailing regularity out of the pockets of those 4,000 miners waiting to deposit.

Mr. HEYBURN. I feel it is only fair to say that the State from which I come does not permit those vicious practices suggested by the Senator from Montana, and I did not know from the reading of the statutes that they were permitted in Mon-

Mr. CARTER. We used to license gambling in Montana, but we have grown better. We strictly enforce the law.

Mr. HEYBURN. So do we. Mr. CARTER. But it is a notorious fact that the ways and means afforded to miners to spend their money are varied and enticing. And now the Senator bolsters up into an argument the difficulty of depositing money in the post-office at a mining camp as a reason for the suggestion he makes, that it is utterly impracticable to establish this system.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho argues against the experience of governments and men this wide world over, extending from the establishment of the postal savings system in England, under the leadership of Mr. Gladstone, in 1861. worked with unfailing satisfaction in thickly populated countries; for instance, in Birmingham, England, where 40,000 men would deposit in the post-office instead of 4,000, it has not been found impracticable.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the indulgence of the Senator to interrupt him.

Mr. CARTER. Certainly; I am glad to yield.
Mr. HEYBURN. I know it does not distract his mind to be interrupted. Does the Government of England loan this money to anybody after it has received it under the Gladstone policy? Mr. CARTER. The Government of England invests the money in the consols of the Government,
Mr. HEYBURN. What does that mean?

Mr. CARTER. It invests it in the bonds of the Government. Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; in other words, it takes the money

Mr. CARTER. That is another way of putting it. We are permitted under this bill, if the banks to which the Senator refers do not desire to use this money, to invest it in the approved securities of the country, in State bonds, in county bonds, in municipal bonds.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will it annoy the Senator if I ask another question?

Mr. CARTER. No; I shall be glad to have the Senator ask it.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator, of course, is aware of the fact that the gross value of all the municipal bonds available is not one-fourth of the amount that the deposits would be in one year. In other words, we can not to-day get enough as the basis for the issue of the currency of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator refers to the bonds of the United

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the bonds of States and counties. It is not one-fourth of the amount of the estimated deposits under this proposed law in one year.

Mr. CARTER. Of course the Statistical Abstract would settle that, and I am quite sure in opposition to the contention of the Senator from Idaho. But the mathematics of it can be

Mr. President, after objecting upon the ground of it being impracticable, the Senator proceeded to state that this postal savings system had never been tried anywhere under conditions approximating those obtaining in this country. The Senator will recall that it has been operated in the Dominion of Canada, over a larger territory than our own because the area of Canada is larger, and operated with eminent success from the be

Mr. HEYBURN. If I may interrupt the Senator again, the application of this legislation in Canada is as it is in England. The money goes into the funds of the Canadian government; it is not loaned out to anybody.

Mr. CARTER. Then the objection of the Senator, reduced to the last analysis, means that the system may be good, but that the method of loaning out or disposing of the money is the source of vice in it. Do I correctly apprehend the Senator's view?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator very nearly correctly apprehends my position. There are so many evils evident upon the face of this proposition that I would myself hesitate to compare them in size or importance, but that is one of the big ones.

Mr. CARTER. Let us dispose of one of these great difficulties at a time. Certainly in England, in Australia, in Japan, and in France will be found crowds of people quite as large as those to be found in the mining camps of Idaho, and yet such a difficulty as the Senator conjures up for Idaho never has been encountered in the administration of a similar law since the first law was passed on the subject. It is true that we have in the city of Washington 350,000 people, and the Senator might well say one post-office is not sufficient for 350,000 people. Imagine going forth in the morning to see 350,000 people lined up in front of the post-office to get their mail. It might be said that in order that they might have good accommodations there should be a post-office at every street corner.

These difficulties the Senator conjures up for himself are imaginary. Business in Idaho would continue along normal lines precisely as in other departments and in other features of the postal service. Do the 4,000 men in the mines have a riot in front of the post-office in order to get their mail on Sunday morning? There are mining camps where free delivery does not obtain at all, and I have known many of them of over 4,000 in population, and yet the difficulty in getting the mail from the general-delivery window has never been so serious as to embarrass the department or cause a radical change of law. take it that this difficulty of getting the money deposited is something that occurred to the Senator incidentally and was spoken without much reflection. Mr. HEYBURN. I am quite sure the Senator from Montana did not suppose that I was undertaking to discuss this question as it applies to the State of Idaho. I sometimes take a text or some incident for the purpose of illustration. What I said with relation to Idaho might as well have been said with respect to any other place. A factory town with ten or fifteen thousand inhabitants would have illustrated as well the condition I was attempting to illustrate. I merely localized it because of those conditions with which I am quite familiar.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator, passing from Idaho, suggested that this bill would allow a man with a large family to accumulate a very large sum of money in the post-office. The Senator told us of a man with 13 children between office. The Senator told us of a man with 13 children between the ages of 10 and 21. I could not quite figure it out, but conceding that he might have 13 children between the ages of 10 and 21, and these 13 children should each have $500 on deposit, and then the old man should have $500 on deposit and his wife should have $500 on deposit, it would make $7,500 to the credit of 15 people. Will this country be any worse off because a man with 13 children and a wife has $7,500 on deposit?

But he would not have it on deposit unless it was an extraordinary case, for, Mr. President, if experience along similar lines is of any avail, our people would act about as other people act, and the statistical fact stands to be consulted that in England, where there is to-day in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000 on deposit in the postal savings banks, the average to the credit of each individual is about $72. So our friend with 13 children and a wife, if just an average person outside of having 13 children, would have about $72 to the credit of each one.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would be in time of peace, but in time of necessity probably he would have more on deposit. I will say to the Senator I was not speaking thoughtlessly when I said I knew a man who had 13 children between the ages stated. I think the Senator's imagination can probably arrange them in pairs, and so forth.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I am not prepared to admit that the people of this country are essentially different from the people of any other country. I do not think the Senator wishes to be understood as asserting that a business operation which can be conducted successfully by the people of Japan and the Philippine Islands and Canada and all the countries of Europe, with one or two exceptions only, can not be operated successfully by the people of the United States.

I do not believe the Senator wishes to have us understand that the deposits of small sums which would go to the postoffice would seriously interfere with the banking operations of the country, except to aid them, in view of the fact that since the establishment of the postal savings bank in Europe the banking activities and the banking strength of every country have been greater and more potent than ever before.

The Senator complains that the money will not be easily gotten out of the bank. It is not intended that it should be, Mr. President. Let me assert to the Senator what I have asserted often on this floor prior to this date—that it is not the purpose to establish anything of an institution here in competition with the commercial or savings banks of the country. We pay a lower rate of interest than any savings bank in the country pays. We do not cash a check. We do not propose to try pays. We do not cash a check. We do not propose to issue a bill of exchange. We do not propose to do any of the many things essential to the conduct of banking business.

But, Mr. President, the Senator says that he objects to a section which provides that the depositor may withdraw his money from the postal savings bank under rules and regulations to be presented by the Postmaster-General. I presume tions to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General. I presume he would have him get his money out without any rule, regulation, or formality at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.
Mr. HEYBURN. I would have him keep his money and make some use of it and do business with it, and be a part of the active community in which he lives. I should like in this connection to suggest to the Senator from Montana that a man deposits $500 with the Government and it draws interest. Is it 2½ per cent?

Mr. CARTER. Two per cent.
Mr. HEYBURN. Two per cent. It is deposited in the national bank in the community where he lives. He finds he wants to do business quickly. He can not get it from the Government. So he goes to the national bank and he says:

I have $500 in the postal savings fund, which was deposited with you. I want to do some business that will be advantageous to me. I should like to have $300.

The bank says:

Very good; we will loan it to you at, say, 73 or 8 per cent.

In other words, he has his money in that bank; that is, the money that was his is in that bank, at 2 per cent. He is getting 2 per cent. He goes there to draw it for necessary purposes and he pays 6 or 8 per cent, or whatever the bank may choose to charge him.

Mr. CARTER. The ordinary bank would, I suppose, pay a check on presentation.

Mr. HEYBURN. A check?
Mr. CARTER. A check. The savings banks of the country reserve the right to demand from thirty to ninety days' notice before paying back at times money is stringent.

Mr. HEYBURN. How often do they do it?

Mr. CARTER. It has been done over and over again in recent years in all parts of this country. Mr. HEYBURN. You would wreck nearly every bank that did it.

Mr. CARTER. It was done in the city of New York within eighteen months.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was done in the city of New York, and it brought the greatest run upon the bank that did it that was ever known in the financial history of the country. I will undertake to say that in a large majority of the cases where savings banks have resorted to that rule they have brought a run on themselves.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the fact remains that in the articles of incorporation of every savings bank in the country is reserved the authority to promulgate what is known as "by-laws." Those by-laws become a rule of action, not only for the bank itself, but for the depositor who accepts a pass book and thereupon subscribes to the by-laws. Those by-laws provide in terms for notice of the withdrawal or intention to withdraw a deposit, and the terms vary from thirty days to three months.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

Mr. CARTER. Not one bank in New York, but, I believe, every savings bank institution on Manhattan Island put up the danger signal in 1907 and exacted full notice,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator states correctly what the by-laws of savings banks provide, but in practice those by-laws are pretty nearly a dead letter. I will venture to say that 100 persons going to a savings bank in New Hampshire can withdraw any reasonable amount of the deposits without notice, but that by-law is framed for the purpose of protecting the bank in an emergency.

Mr. CARTER. That I understand, and it is generally invoked only in an emergency.

Mr. GALLINGER. In an emergency; that is all.

Mr. CARTER. In the case of the postal savings bank there would be no such notice required; but we would not pay a check, we would not open a current account, the butcher could not be paid, the grocer could not be paid, nor could any of the bills ordinarily contracted be paid by an order on the post-

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure. Mr. HEYBURN. I ask the Senator if it is not also true that the grocer and other dealers he has enumerated could not collect their money there?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, that presents another feature of the case. We are dealing with the matter of withdrawal. I will reach that very soon.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not rise to ask that question; it occurred to me after I rose. I rose to ask where or what is this bank of which the Sengtor speaks? What constitutes it? Is it bank of which the Senator speaks? What constitutes it? Is it the bank in which the money is deposited, the national bank, or is it the Treasury of the United States, or is it the post-office? Which is the bank?

Mr. CARTER. The depositor has no relation whatever to the money after placing it in the post-office.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then the post-office is the bank?

Mr. HEYBURN. Then the post-office is the bank? Mr. CARTER. The post-office is as to the depositor the only The relation of the bank in which the money is deposited by the postmaster is a relation between the Government and that bank, and not between the original depositor and that bank.

Mr. HEYBURN. That reminds me of a bank that I knew during the panic of 1893——

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator for a question only.
Mr. HEYBURN. This is to illustrate it, and I think the Senator can see the point. The bank did not close its doors, but it put up a sign, "We are a bank of deposit, not of payment." That is the kind of a bank the post-office would be.

Mr. CARTER. That is not an illustration of the fact at all as it exists. I say it is not intended under this bill that the postmaster should pay checks, but when an individual has an amount on deposit in the post-office he must appear there and demand the return of it under some regulation that the Postmaster-General will find most acceptable to the people and calculated to accommodate them to the greatest possible degree without endangering the administration of the department in this particular. Mr. HEYBURN. Those conditions are as yet the unwritten

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the majority of the laws of life are unwritten. It would be merely trifling to undertake in an act of Congress to prescribe the exact form of contract with the post-office and the form of receipt to be taken back, when all that can be provided by a regulation of the officer charged with the administration of the law.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator takes grave exception to the exemption in this bill. The exemption would extend to garnishment. I care not whether the bill embraces a section declaring that this money in the hands of the Government shall not be subject to garnishment or not, it will be money in the hands of the Government of the United States, and will not be subject to garnishment. In an old and well-established case

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the junior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator. Mr. BORAH. Some of us who favor the bill have been giving some attention to section 10. I wish to ask the Senator whether there is any precedent which he had in mind at the time of drawing the bill with reference to this exemption and whether it will be necessary to put anything in at all as to exemption from garnishments? Would it not be exempt anyway?

Mr. CARTER. I am quite sure it would be exempt, as to garnishment at least. As to the question of taxation, I am not so clear, if it is a question whether it is within the power of Congress to declare the depositor's account not subject to

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that simply because individual money is placed in the post-office that that of itself would exempt it from garnishment? Is that the contention?

Mr. CARTER. That is not the contention. The contention is that money put in the hands of the United States for payment to any person is not subject to garnishment at all. case of Buchanan v. Alexander, reported in 4 Howard, 20, holds this doctrine. It appears that the purser on a vessel was made defendant in a garnishment proceeding at the instance of a creditor of a seaman. The purser defended. He admitted that he had the money of the seaman there, to be paid over to him, but the Supreme Court held that a third party could not be permitted to intervene and by any process divert that money from the hand of the individual to whom the Government was obligated to pay it. That, I think, is a leading case and a conclusive case.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. How can the Senator or anyone claim that the money after it has been paid to the post-office belongs in any sense to the person depositing it? If I understand the bill at all, the moment the money is deposited in the post-office the Government becomes the debtor of the depositor, Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no agreement to pay the same money back. It is simply an indebtedness of the Government, an indebtedness that bears 2 per cent interest. Then the question would arise whether the State or any authority can tax the indebtedness due from the Government itself to any individual. If that is not safeguarded in the bill, it certainly seems to me it ought to be safeguarded, for it seems to me that this is being talked of and considered as though the money belonged to the depositor after he had made the deposit instead of being entirely government money and there being nothing but the indebtedness existing between the two.

Mr. CARTER. The statement of the Senator from North Dakota accurately describes the relation, as I understand the relation, between the money and the depositor and the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I trust, if I may be par-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the senior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.
Mr. HEYBURN. I trust no one understood me to take a different position. I asserted more than once that the title passed at the instant of the deposit; but I asserted, also, that the thing which the individual received was property as much as that which he yielded up. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President

Mr. CARTER. At this point, if the junior Senator from Idaho will permit me, I wish to state, in reply to the Senator, that it is my judgment that if the United States Government can exempt its bonds from taxation in the respective States it can exempt any other form of indebtedness of the United States, including an entry on a pass book held by a depositor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the junior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. I yield with pleasure. Mr. BORAH. I ask whether or not the certificate or the representation of the relationship between the depositor and the Government would be subject to attachment and sale?

Mr. CARTER. I can not conceive it so. Mr. BORAH. If it is not subject to attachment, then I should think that the position which the Senator from North Dakota Mr. McCumber] takes would not obtain in sufficient strength to protect the depositor, because a creditor could proceed to sell the certificate which represents his deposit and collect his debt against him anyway. While you could not garnishee the Government and ask the Government to respond, yet if he has the evidence of his deposit, you could attach that and sell it under execution or a proceeding supplementary to execution.

Mr. CARTER. It is not an assignable evidence, it is but an intangible thing bearing evidence of a relationship existing between the individual and the Government, which can not be transferred by legal process to anyone else.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the senior Senator from Idaho? Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would be perfectly willing to admit and submit to the position the Senator takes, but there is a very strong argument against it. If it is not subject to taxation or liable for the payment of debts, then you have set apart this vast sum of money so that it will contribute nothing to responsible personal obligation or to the Government through taxation. I think one argument is as strong against it as the other.

Mr. CARTER. In reply to that, it is all sufficient to say that the element least responsive to taxation in this country and every other country is ready cash. Look over the assessor's lists in any county, not excluding the county of New York, and you will find we are the most poverty-stricken people the world ever knew in the matter of ready money. Nobody returns ready money. They do not happen to have it on hand. Of the $3,000,-000,000 of circulation in the United States I venture to say that not 10 per cent is returned for taxation anywhere. The people who have large sums of this thing that can be so conveniently secreted return but a bare moiety of the whole for taxation. Yet the Senator would urge as an overwhelming objection to the bill the beneficent extension of an exemption law which would relieve the savings of the poor from a burden never assumed by the colossal accumulations of the rich.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the junior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.
Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I believe in the exemption; I believe it should be exempt; but I do not believe that you can exempt it by a power of the General Government. There is no doubt, it seems to me, but that, as the savings are coming from the poor people supposedly, it is very proper for the Government to exempt them, if the Government can do it. But the thought which was running in my mind was that it was not within the power of the General Government to enter within the domain of a State and say that the individual holdings and ownings of a citizen should be exempt from taxation.

I am aware that the courts have held that you may exempt the bonds of the Government, but they have done so under a specific provision of the Constitution and because they repre sented one of the instrumentalities and agencies of the General Government. But that is an entirely different thing from saying that you may exempt the individual citizen's property from It is not a question of the principle; it is a question whether the State or the General Government must do it: and that is the reason why I asked the Senator whether or not there was any precedent for this proposition.

Mr. CARTER. I am not aware of any precedent, I will frankly say to the Senator. I have grave doubt as to the right of Congress to exempt the depositor's money from taxation merely because of its deposit in a postal savings depository. It can not be sustained, in my judgment, upon any other ground than that just recently referred to, that the evidence of indebtedness, whether in bond, or pass book, or temporary note, might be exempt from taxation. Certainly the bond has been held as exempt from taxation, properly, under the law of Congress, but with the qualification in McCulloch v. Maryland, stated, I think, by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. As to whether the reasoning in that leading opinion would cover a bank deposit in such a case as that we are contemplating I have great doubts. But as to the right of the Government to hold money free from garnishment I have no doubt whatever in the absence of any statute on the subject or provision in this particular bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana vield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether it be or be not true that if the State has the right to tax this property it is a constitutional right that can not be taken away from it by an act of Congress?

Mr. CARTER. Of course the act of Congress could not deprive the State of any right which constitutionally it had; and it would be to that extent-

Mr. CUMMINS. Whatever right the State has to tax grows out of its relation to the General Government, and if it be guaranteed to the State by the Constitution it follows, I assume.

that it can not be taken away by an act of Congress

I make the suggestion, Mr. President, because I have certain amendments to this measure pending which I desire to bring before the Senate at some convenient time. One of those amendments proposes to strike from the bill the provision to exempt these deposits from taxation, and the reason why I bring that amendment forward is because I believe it is wholly impossible for Congress, constitutionally, to deal with the matter at all. If the State has the right, it has it by virtue of the Constitution. If it has not the right, it can not exercise it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, my understanding is that the States granted to the Federal Government a certain measure of taxing power and reserved unto themselves all power not expressly granted to the Federal Government. If the reserved power is the right to tax money on deposit under such conditions as we are here contemplating, then, of course, Congress can not impair that reserved constitutional right of taxation.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] -and I will be briefstated in the very beginning what impressed me most forcibly, that, in his judgment, this measure was not to be voted on at all; was not to be passed by this Senate or this Congress. I do not care to go beyond the Chamber in making predictions, but I am surprised at the statement of the Senator from Idaho, in view of his further statement to the effect that the bill was not worthy of any very serious consideration at all.

Mr. President, the Senate, in my humble judgment, can be trusted to pass upon things lacking in merit by appropriate evidence of disapproval, and all we ask for this bill, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, is a vote on the merits in this Chamber. Is the Senator ready now to agree to a time?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it requires oftentimes as much consideration and discussion to discover that a measure of proposed legislation is bad as to discover that it is good, and of course the bill will have to be discussed. It is a pending measure before this body. I will not agree to a time to vote on it, because I do not think it has received the consideration that it should receive, even though it is to be repudiated. I believe that when a great question of proposed change in our Government, such as this, comes into the legislative body of the United States for consideration, it should receive thorough consideration; and even while we may be justified in the eyes of the people in having refused the legislation, to turn it down without adequate consideration would discredit us as not having been sufficiently vigilant in determining whether the suggestion which came to us through a great political convention should be given consideration.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the desire of the Senator to consider will be gratified to the extent of my ability to bring the measure forward hereafter for consideration. The Senator further stated that there has been no demand for this legislation which Congress was in any measure bound to respect, and he gave expression to a sentiment, which I most cordially approve, to the effect that the people of this country are in the last measure the rulers of the country rather than the President and the Congress and the courts. To that sentiment I accede.

The people of the country can only impress the Congress and the Executive through certain well-known methods of expres-We have become aligned, as in all parliamentary governments people will become aligned, into parties, standing for certain definite things upon which we go to trial from time to time before the electorate.

It so happened, Mr. President, that all parties in this country, with one accord and without dissenting voice, through their delegates coming fresh from the American people, pronounced in favor of the establishment of a postal savings system. The National Grange, embracing the great body of the farming communities of the country-12,000,000 freemen-the bone and sinew of the Republic, pronounced in favor of this kind of legislation; and yet the Senator, in the presence of the public press, in spite of the pronouncements of all the national conventions, announces to us that the American people are ruling the country, but they can not have this thing.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure. Mr. HEYBURN. I notice that the Senator from Montana sys "a" postal savings system.

Mr. HEIBURN. I notice that the senator from Montana says "a" postal savings system.

Mr. CARTER. "A" postal savings system.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; "a" postal savings system. Mr. President, it does not follow because all the people, for instance, declare in favor of a principle that any expression of that principle will meet their declaration. "A" postal savings that principle will meet their declaration. "A" postal savings bank bill; yes, if the Government will establish a postal savings system without agreeing to pay interest on the deposits to the people, and allow the people to draw the deposits out whenever they are needed, and thus become merely the safe custodian, I will support it. That is the kind of postal savings bank I am in favor of; but I am not in favor of one that exists by a system of rivalry in the speculative money world. The system I have outlined is the only safe system of postal savings banks in our country, and it would meet the requirements of the people and the demand of the political organizations. The vice of this proposition is the money changer. The vice of it is that the Government shall contract to pay interest to the owner of the money in order that it may enter into the scramble of finance.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington? Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. PILES. I should like to remind the Senator from Idaho of the fact that the bill which the Senator from Montana has in charge was before this body at the time the national plat-forms of the different parties were adopted. The people of the country understood when those platforms were adopted that we were to pay 2 per cent interest on postal savings deposits, and in their several conventions, and by their votes at the polls, they sustained the bill which the Senator from Montana intro-

Mr. HEYBURN. The people! Why, Mr. President, not onethousandth of 1 per cent of the people ever had the opportunity of reading the bill to which the Senator from Washington refers. They knew nothing about it, only that there was a cry which went out, "Give us safety for our earnings." That is what the people wanted—safety for their earnings, trusting to the judgment of their representatives to provide the details by which that safety could be brought about.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator would not say, would he, that the people also objected to having, in addition to safety, some interest on their earnings?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the smaller the percentage of people in this country who live on the interest on their money the higher the degree of prosperity of the people. The more people doing business for themselves the higher the grade of civilization. Men are apt to get the "pay-window stoop" getting with certainty at the end of every month a check for so many dollars, taking no chances in the business life of the country. I repeat, the more men doing business on their own responsibility in this country the higher the degree of pros-perity and the higher the grade of civilization. The man who is his own master, who works for himself, steps a little firmer and holds his head a little higher than the man who works for another; and the ambition that should be instilled into the mind of every boy in this country is to be his own master; to work for nobody but himself.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, we have fared well in the course of the discussion this afternoon, and I now understand that the Senator's only objection to the bill is that it proposes

Mr. HEYBURN. The only one, Mr. President? Oh, no. [Laughter.] The Senator must have allowed his mind to wander away if he has heard no other. That is one of them. I put it that way.

Mr. CARTER. I understood the Senator to say that he would have no objection to the bill if it did not provide for the payment of interest.

payment of interest.

Mr. HEYBURN. To this bill? Oh, yes; I have many objections. I stated I would have no objection to "a" bill—

Mr. CARTER. Oh!

Mr. HEYBURN (continuing). That provided that the Government should say to a party who was a self-confessed incompetent to take care of his few pennies, "We will hold them for you and keep anybody from getting them away from you until you need them.'

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement before asking a vote on the pending amendment, which I hope will be accepted by every Senator present and acted upon.

This bill has been pending with a favorable-indeed, a unanimous-report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for many, many months. It was reported here from the committee some time last year. There has certainly been ample time for proper consideration of its provisions. It has been the unfinished business now for a considerable length of time; and I shall consider it hereafter my duty to the Senate, to the committee, and to the country to insist upon the consideration of this bill at every proper time henceforth until a vote shall have been reached.

There are a few amendments pending, one particularly by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins], which he desires to press with his great force. I trust that we may so dispose of the committee amendments to-day as to leave the way open for the Senator from Iowa to present his views in support of his amendment. I therefore ask a vote on the pending amendment, which, I think, is a formal matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us have the amendment stated, Mr.

President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all of section 7. and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 7. That interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum shall be allowed and entered in the pass book to the credit of each depositor once in each year, the same to be computed on such basis and under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe; but interest shall not be computed or allowed on any amount less than $1 or some multiple thereof: Provided, That the balance to the credit of any one person shall never be allowed to exceed $500, exclusive of accumulated interest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I inquire if that is a committee amendment?

Mr. CARTER. It is. Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to inquire as to the amendment. I have had handed me by a page a print of the amendment of January 14. I suppose it is to take the place not only of that portion of the original bill that was reported from the committee, but also of the amendment printed in large type, which I supposed was the pending amendment.

Mr. CARTER. That amendment is pending, but I think the amendment now offered is a substitute for both the text and the pending amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a substitute for all of section 7? Mr. CARTER. For all of section 7, with the proposed amendment as printed in the text.

amendment as printed in the text.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not printed in the bill that I have.
Is there another print?

Mr. CARTER. There is, I think. The Senator will find what is called the pending amendment in section 7 on page 6.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it is the section, but it is not all the

Mr. CARTER. The amendment just read proposes to strike out all of section 7 and to disregard the pending amendment, so called. It is a substitute for both.

I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the purpose of this amendment is to permit computations of interest to be made upon as short a period of time as a basis as may be consistent with the administration of the law, without too great a burden upon the clerical force.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, as it appears to me, the amendment does not attempt to establish any rule for the payment of interest, but leaves it entirely to the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. CARTER. It leaves it to his discretion.
Mr. HEYBURN. So that the provision, as contained in the bill as it was last printed, specifying the manner of the payment of interest and of computing the interest, is stricken out.

Mr. CARTER. It is stricken out.

Mr. HEYBURN. And the matter is left entirely to subsequent "legislation" by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I will explain to the Senator from Idaho that the original text of the bill provided that interest should be computed upon the average deposit for each interest should be computed upon the average deposit for each quarter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I have that. Mr. CARTER. It was believed, upon mature reflection, that this would lead to a very great volume of clerical work, and, in consequence, it was proposed that computations be based on the average of each six months' deposit. To that it was objected, and I think very properly, that persons would have their money on deposit frequently for nigh six months, and in certain con-tingencies for a year, or a little less, without receiving any interest at all. In order to permit the Postmaster-General to compute the interest upon the fairest possible basis consistent with reasonable bounds of clerical work, it was thought wiser to leave that to his discretion. If he can compute it on the basis of monthly balances, well and good; if not, then on quarterly balances; and if not on quarterly balances, he may be driven to take half-yearly balances.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not there is now remaining in the bill a limit as to the time which money may remain on deposit?

Mr. CARTER. There is no limit as to the time during which money may remain on deposit-Mr. HEYBURN. It may remain on deposit for a lifetime.

Mr. CARTER. Except that there is a limit of $500 as to the aggregate amount that may be deposited, exclusive of accumulated interest, and a limit of $100 deposit for each month.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, at the end of twenty years or thereabouts, or, say, fifty years, a man who had deposited $500 would have a thousand dollars drawing interest.

Mr. CARTER. He would not have a thousand dollars drawing interest. He would have the original $500 drawing inter-There would be no arrangement for compounding interest.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, that provision has been stricken from the original bill. This matter came up very suddenly to-day, and I have not had time to thoroughly compare it. As I recollect, the original draft of this bill provided for adding the interest at certain periods to the principal. That has been stricken

Mr. CARTER. I have not before me the particular matter to which the Senator refers. It has no relation, however, to computation, as I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President, when I am satisfied that this measure has received the attention that I think it is entitled to, I shall not delay action, because I represent only the responsibility of one member of this body; but I do not believe that the Senate has yet given the consideration to a measure of this kind that it should receive before responsible action is taken.

I have no hesitation at all in saying that I know the people at large do not understand the force or effect or scope of this measure, and I feel a responsibility resting upon me as a member of this body to do what I can to hold it under consideration until they do understand it and approve it.

This is not the time to come at me with the proposition that a political convention, through its committee on platform, has declared in favor of a postal savings bank bill. You can draw a postal savings bank bill in a hundred forms, each one of which would constitute a postal savings bank bill. It does not follow, therefore, that this particular bill is to be enacted without consideration or change because of a declaration in a plat-

For one, with the people with whom I have come in contact during the last great campaign, I have not undertaken to support this measure, and I will not be called upon to apologize for my action in attempting to prevent the enactment of what I deem unwise legislation. I say that with all due regard for those who are presenting the bill. I do not think we are prepared to vote upon this measure or will be for some time to I understand the proposition now is to vote upon the amendment, and that it will still be open to consideration later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 202) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INAUGURAL PERMITS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 202) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc.
Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the joint resolution considered now, without referring it to a committee. It is in regard to the inauguration ceremonies, and has been passed by the other House. It is in virtually the same form as the bill which we passed in the Senate a week or ten days ago. The committee is very anxious to have the matter definitely settled. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration. to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CADMUS E. CRABILL.

Mr. CLAY. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7325) for the relief of Cadmus E. Crabill, to report it favorably with amendments and to submit a report (No. 845) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to the

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and Is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Cadmus E. Crabill, postmaster at South Bend, Ind., with the sum of $18,653.50, being the amount of postage stamps and stamped paper belonging to the Post-Office Department of the United States, stolen from said Cadmus E. Crabill by robbers on the 15th day of November, 1908, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of said postmaster.

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PENSACOLA, FLA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7276) providing for the improvement, repair, and an addition to the public building at Pensacola, Fla

Mr. CARTER. I hope the Senator will wait until the amendment presented by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to the postal savings banks bill shall have been considered. It may be time to adjourn for the evening. I know not of that; but if it is not, I hope we shall continue with the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I thought the bill had gone over. Mr. CARTER. It has only been laid aside temporarily.
Mr. TALIAFERRO. Requests for unanimous consent seem to be in order. There were a number of such requests, and I saw no reason why I should not ask for the present consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. CARTER. One Senator requested the privilege of making a report from a committee, and another followed that up by a request for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I withdraw the request, if there is objection to it.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes

Mr. CUMMINS. If there is no further amendment to the postal savings banks bill on the part of the committee, I desire to offer the amendments submitted by me a few days ago and now on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa proposes amendments, which will be stated. Does the Senator desire his amendments acted upon in the order in which they were

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to present them at the same time. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out section 10; also to strike out section 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 10. That the Postmaster-General shall, as herein provided, deposit postal savings depository funds received at the post-office in any city, town, or village in the bank or banks organized under the national law or a state or territorial law and doing business in such city, town, or village; and if in any such city, town, or village; and if in any such city, town, or village there be no such bank, or if the funds have been received at a post-office not within a city, town, or village, then in the nearest bank or banks in the State or Territory: Provided, however, That no depository funds shall be deposited in any bank organized under a state or territorial law unless the laws of the State or Territory in which it is located require public supervision and examination; And provided further, That such examination shows the bank to be solvent not only as to creditors but with unimpaired capital.

Before a deposit is made in any bank as above authorized the bank shall agree to pay interest thereon computed upon the daily balance at the rate of not less than 2½ per cent per annum. Each bank receiving deposits under the authority of this act shall from time to time give such suitable bond or bonds, with surety or sureties to be approved by the Postmaster-General, as will indemnify the Government against loss. If the banks herein described as the banks in which the funds are to be deposited refuse to accept a deposit or deposits upon the terms and conditions above prescribed, then and in such case the Postmaster-General may use any bank designated by him and complying with said terms and conditions for such deposit or deposits; or he may invest the same in state, territorial, county, or municipal bonds to be selected by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General. Interest and profits shall be applied first to the payment of interest accruing to depositors in postal savings depositories as hereinbefore provided, and the excess thereof, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury as part of the postal revenues. For the purposes of this act the word "Territory" as used herein shall be held to include the District of Columbia, the district of Alaska, and Porto Rico.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is getting rather late, and if the Senator from Iowa does not desire to go on at this time, I will move an executive session, if that be agreeable to him.

Mr. CUMMINS. It will be quite agreeable to me to go on to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 26, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

JOHN R. BINNS.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to address the House for three or four minutes on a matter of public interest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] asks unanimous consent to address the House for three or four minutes on a matter of public interest. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, during the last two days we have been reminded once more of the perils that beset those "that go down to the sea in ships and do business on the great The accident that befell the steamships Republic and Florida last Saturday found heroes ready for the heroic work demanded of officers, crews, and passengers. I believe that everyone who read the accounts of the collision, the jeopardy in which the occupants of the two ships were placed, and the way in which the news reached the rescuers, felt that there was one silent actor in the tragedy whose name should be immortalizedthe Marconi operator on the Republic, who had the cool head and steady hand to send forth on the willing wings of the air the message of disaster that saved hundreds of lives and the message of deliverance that relieved thousands of anxious hearts.

His name is John R. Binns. [Applause.] He is known to several Members of this House. A New York morning paper gives a brief account of Binns and his work:

[From the New York Sun, January 25, 1909.]

BINNS, WIRELESS—THE MAN THAT SENT THE NEWS OF THE REPUBLIC'S MISHAP.

BINNS, WIRELESS—THE MAN THAT SENT THE NEWS OF THE REPUBLIC'S MISHAP.

Jack Binns—his initials are J. R., but he doesn't usually bother with them—the Marconi operator on the Republic who sent out the distress signals, "C Q D." probably was just as cool and deliberate as the messages he sent would seem to indicate. Binns is only about 25 years old, but he isn't easily excited.

Binns knew that "C Q D" signal by heart; in fact, he practiced it. If Speaker Cannon will brush his memory a bit, he will remember an operator on the steamship Bluecher, which took him, James S. Shermans, Dr. Andrew D. White, and others of a distinguished party to Panama, explaining the working of the Marconi system and illustrating it by letting off a few streaks of electrical fre, which crackled so that it made the Speaker step a little sideways, as being a new kind of a blue streak. That chap was Binns, and he told the Speaker that down in the West Indian waters there was really very little for a Marconi operator to do, as the system down that way was De Forest.

"And the only time we tap in on the De Forest system, Mr. Speaker," Binns said, "is when a general call for distress comes. It is known as "C Q D" and goes something like this [some spirited electrical spluttering]. Then all operators on every system drop everything and fall to passing the word around."

In crossing to this country on the Hamburg-American steamship President Grant after his trip around the world, Mr. Taft evidently took an interest in the work Binns was mastering. what the news was before it was printed in the snip's diminutive newspaper.

Binns got a promotion and had the responsible place of chief operator of the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria offered to him. Here he did well, and through his good work a tempting job on one of the big land stations in Ireland was offered to him. His love for the sea got the better of him and soon he got himself transferred to a ship again. He was at Genoa at the time of the earthquake and was able to be of assistance with his apparatus. This was not his first earthquake experience, as the Bluecher, on its trip before the one Speaker Cannon's party made, had touched at Kingston at the time of the catastrophe there.

The place of the chief wireless operator aboard the ship is well defined. He takes orders from nobody but the captain and ranks as an officer. Binns was rounding out his forty-first trip to New York from Europe, though he had made many side voyages.

noticed tasks of life. Is it not an inspiration for all of us to feel that there are heroes for every emergency, and that in human life no danger is so great that some Jack Binns is not ready to face it? [Ap-

ELECTION CONTEST-WARMOTH V. ESTOPINAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1: NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 21, 1909.

I would respectfully request that this letter and notice of withdrawal be sent to the proper committee, so that your honorable body can dispose of same.

PERMITS TO COMMITTEE ON INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up House joint resolution 202, and move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following, which I send to the Clerk's

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the joint resolution, the title of which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 202, authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonles on the occasion of the inaugura-tion of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc.

The SPEAKER. Now, the gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new text, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to grant a permit to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of the Pension building in the city of Washington, except such rooms therein as are used and occupied for the payment of pensions, on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1909, subject to such restrictions and regulations and limitations as to space as the said Secretary may prescribe in respect of the period and manner of such use, including all secondary of the period and manner of such use, including all Sec. 2. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable for each such offense to a fine not to exceed $100, in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than sixty days. And the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby likewise appropriated, to be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the construction, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public-comfort stations and information booths during the period aforesaid.

Sec. 5. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonles such ensigns, flags, etc., belonging to the Government of the United States (except battle flags) that are not now in use and may be suitable and proper for decoration, and may, in their judgment, be spared without detriment to the public service, such flags to be used in connection with said ceremonies by said committee under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the said Secretaries, or either of them, in decorating the fronts of public buildings and other places on the line of march between the Capitol and the Executive Manslon and the interior of the reception hall: Provided, That the loan of the said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., to said chairman shall not take place prior to the 24th day of February, and they shall be returned by him by the 10th day of March, 1909: Provided further, That the said committee shall indemnify the said departments, or either of them, for any loss or damage to such flags not necessarily incident to such use. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the inaugural committee, for the purpose of carring for the sick, injured, and infirm on

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. SIMS. Make your explanation first, if you want to explain.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the only explanation I have to make is that we substitute the language just read for the resolution which was considered here two weeks ago, with amendments in these words: In line 6 insert "except such rooms therein as are used and occupied for the payment of pensions," and, in line 10, by the insertion of "and limitations as to space." These amendments were offered for the purpose of making certain that pensioners can be paid as promptly as

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, as some of the Members of the House present know, this resolution or a similar one was considered and the House amended that resolution by striking out that portion of the resolution authorizing the use of the Pension building. The letter of the commissioner was read, which shows that it would deprive the department of the service of the employees of the Pension Bureau for twenty days, amounting to a loss of $95,000, with great danger to the files in the office from destruction by fire; and the House, in the Committee of the Whole, voted by a substantial majority to strike out the authority given for the use of the Pension Office. Now, the Senate has passed a similar resolution without that amendment. The Senate resolution has gone to the District Committee of the House and was reported favorably, and that is being offered as a substitute for the House resolution as amended, which includes the use of the Pension Office. I discussed these things fully when the House resolution was being considered. I would not have time to do it now, and would not do it if I had, because it is not necessary.

I naturally suppose this House will pass this resolution, because there has been a great amount of work by a great number of people to secure its passage, and because a great many Members of this House feel embarrassed to vote against it because a distinguished Member of this House is to be inaugurated Vice-President of the United States. Members imagine, I suppose, that this is an occasion calling for merriment for a dance, when a Member of this House, who has served here twenty years in the highest position, except that of Speaker, is to be taken over there and put in the senatorial refrigerator for four years, when it will probably be the last time he will feel like dancing, and perhaps the last time he will be physically able to dance [laughter], because, after he has served there four years, he will go on crutches from rheumatism and the ailments that will naturally belong to such service, after he has been here in this active, virile, legislative body so long.

[Laughter.] So that one of the arguments is that it is on account of this distinguished gentleman, because after this he will, perhaps, never again feel like dancing.

How can you gentlemen who live in the North, where a great majority of these pensioners live, say to those old soldiers that for twenty days they shall incur the risk of burning out these files, delaying for all time, by twenty days, consideration of pension applications? Daily you and I are getting letters as to delay of applications, to which you receive replies, "This matter is being considered, and action will be taken as soon as possible."

I criticised this matter two weeks ago, and a Washington newspaper in an editorial said this, among other things, to which I invite your attention:

Then, why not grant reasonable requests when Washington puts up the money and shoulders the burden?

Let me give you an idea of some of the "shouldering of the burden." Here is a bunch of letters in my hand. I am going to read them, without giving the names of the people who have applied to the hotels for rooms during the inauguration. want you to see how the Washington hotels are shouldering the burden. Here is one from the Metropolitan Hotel. Listen to this, gentlemen:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January -, 1909.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: During the coming inauguration our house will be operated exclusively on the American plan and rates range from $20 upward, each person, for a period of five days. Should you desire a room with bath, the rate would be $125 for the five days, and would secure a room fronting on Pennsylvania avenue, overlooking the line of procession.

Should these rates prove satisfactory to you, we would suggest that you advise us at your earliest possible convenience in order that we may reserve for you such rooms as you desire.

Yours, very truly,

METROPOLITAN HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. For how many rooms is that? Mr. SIMS. One foom.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Do they furnish a bed with that room? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. That is not one of the high-priced hotels, and perhaps is one of the most moderate in Washington. Listen to another one:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January -, 1909.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Acknowledging the receipt of your communication under date of yesterday, I beg to advise that we are making no reservations for the week of inauguration at a later date than March 1, nor for less than five days. At this time I am not able to offer you anything with bath. We have two connecting rooms, however, on the second sleeping floor, one fronting Pennsylvania avenue, with one large window, no bath or running water, at $15 per day—$75 for the five days. Two adjoining rooms, fronting west on Sixth street, at $12 per day. Our rates for suites with bath, fronting Pennsylvania avenue, are $20 per day for five days, and if you so desire, and we should be able later on to accommodate you with such, we will be very glad to let you know.

Yours, very truly,

ST. JAMES HOTEL. That is from the St. James Hotel, another moderate-priced house in Washington. I want to show you how Washingtonians are furnishing the money, as stated in this newspaper editorial. [Laughter.] Here is one from the Arlington Hotel:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January -, 1909.

House of Representatives.

Dear Sir: Replying to your letter of the 13th instant, beg to say we can give you two good rooms at $8 per day each room, European plan, which would have to be reserved from February 26 to March 5. Bathrooms, $2 per day additional. Should this be satisfactory, an early reservation would be advisable to insure these accommodations.

Trusting to have the pleasure of entertaining you, we are,

Yours, very truly,

I have other letters along the same line. The statements of that editorial ought to be amended so as to say that the country furnishes the money, while Washingtonians put up the prices and pull down the money. Yet this whole ceremonial managed by this committee is unofficial.

Why should we give up the Pension Office, at the danger of destruction of valuable records, in addition to delay? Do you feel like dancing, my friends, when hundreds of thousands of laboring people in this country to-day are tramping the streets for lack of employment, when vast industrial plants and establishments are lying idle, with nothing to do? Who feels like dancing over the graves made by the panic? It seems to me more like you would be going to a funeral than to a dance at government expense. Let the old soldiers of this country know upon what condition and at what expense you dance. It will be an honor to this country to abolish this inaugural ball, now and forever. [Applause.] Never give it official recognition or notice again. It is a commercial affair at $5 per head, with no questions asked as to the "heads" if the money goes with them. Vote for this if you want to; assume the risk if you want to. You have the power, but I do not think the day will ever come when you will be proud of the job you have done. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the substitute and the resolution to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, this substitutes the Senate joint resolution for the House joint resolution, and I demand the yeas and nays on that.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker announced 34 in the affirmative.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, the other side. The House divided and there were—noes 151.

Mr. SIMS. Does that give the yeas and nays? The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. SIMS. Then I demand tellers.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused, 33 Members, not a sufficient number. voting therefor.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are refused. Tellers are refused. As many as favor agreeing to the amendment will say "aye," those opposed "no."

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it. Mr. SIMS. Division!

The House divided, and there were 183 ayes and 44 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engressed and read a third time, and was engrossed and read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEALL of Texas) there were 192 ayes and 43 noes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. All those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Thirty-eight gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number; and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the joint resolution was passed. On motion of Mr. Smith of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ADMISSION TO GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR INSANE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12898) to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union because it provides for impaneling jurors, which is a charge upon the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. In what part of the bill?

Mr. HAY. Page 6, line 10.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman call the Chair's attention to the appropriation from which jurors are paid?

Mr. HAY. I also call attention to page 3, line 10, of the bill, where it provides for the payment of $5 a day to experts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the second alleged charge made on the Treasury, lines 9 and 10:

Such physicians shall be allowed a per diem compensation, to be fixed by the court, of not exceeding $5, to be paid by the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAY. I understand the United States pays one-half the expenses, even though the bill says "paid by the District of Columbia." The appropriation is made by Congress, and one-half is paid by the United States Government.

Mr. MANN. The bill expressly provides that the compensation is to be paid by the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The bill does provide that it is to be paid by the District of Columbia, and the Chair will ask the gentleman if that does not mean to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HAY. I do not think so; it does not say to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. As to the impan-eling of the jury, there is no such provision.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter immaterial to me whether this is on the House or the Union Calendar. I think the provision that it shall be paid by the District of Columbia does not force it to go on the Union Calendar, because it is paid from the revenues of the District, and it seems to me in its proper place.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say to page 6, line 10?-

And provided further, That the jury to be used shall be impaneled by the United States marshal of said District, upon the order of the court, from jurors in attendance upon the courts of said District, who shall perform such services in addition to, and as a part of, their duty in said court.

The Chair is under the impression, subject, of course, to correction, that jurors in the District are either paid half from the District revenues and half by the United States or entirely by the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the appropriation act for this year provides for fees of jurors in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $55,000. That is in the District appropriation act, which provides at the beginning that one-half shall be paid from the revenues of the District and the other half by the Government.

The SPEAKER. That is the existing law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the appropriation for the present

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill does not provide for any compensation to the jurors in addition to the compensation they now receive, nor does it provide for any additional jurors from those now provided by law. The bill especially provides that the marshal shall take the jury from the jurors in attendance in a court of said District, who shall perform such duties in addition to, and as a part of, their duties in said court; and if there be no jurors in attendance in the District court, the jurors are to be taken from the jurors in attendance on the police court in the District.

So there is to be no charge on the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say to lines 19 and 20 and following:

That said court may direct a special jury to be summoned for such inquisition.

Mr. MANN. I should be inclined to think that that was a little different proposition.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would suggest that the court now has the right to call a special jury in a case of de lunatico inquirendo. They have under the present law a right to call a special jury, and this only gives them the right to use other juries instead of calling special juries.

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes it for granted, without close examination, that under the law as it now is a jury is not

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes; a jury is mandatory at present in all cases. This bill seeks to take away the mandatory character of compelling a jury. In the law as it exists now it is necessary to call a jury for the sake of making an inquiry as to mental unsoundness of a person.

The SPEAKER. This bill, then, amends the law?

Mr. OLCOTT. This bill amends the law providing that in cases where a jury is demanded it can be called, and if a jury is demanded the commitment may be made, predicated upon the certificates of physicians.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair understands from the gentleman that in all cases a jury is necessary under the law as it

Mr. OLCOTT. That is so.

The SPEAKER. And this seeks to amend the law only so as to dispense with the jury?

Mr. OLCOTT. In certain cases.
The SPEAKER. In certain cases.
Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit in that connection, the parliamentary question is not to be determined by any consideration of whether a change in the law is going to lessen the demand on the Treasury or not. The parliamentary rule applies whenever the bill is such an one as to call for an expenditure, and it does not lie within the province of the Chair to determine that because a jury will be used in a less number of cases therefore there will be a less demand upon the Treasury. The fact that there is a demand at all brings the Treasury. it within the rule that requires consideration by the Committee of the Whole House instead of by the House.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from New York have to say to that proposition?

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I still think that the parliamentary situation is that when it does not increase an appropriation or make an appropriation that is not now provided for, a bill of this character is properly upon the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. After all, the rulings have been that where it requires an argument to find a charge upon the Treasury or no charge upon the Treasury, points of order are generally sustained. But the Chair submits again to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] that the Chair is presumed to know what the law is—perhaps a violent presumption—

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to quarrel with the Chair even upon that presumption, but I submit, for instance, that if a bill were brought in here making certain appropriations of the revenues of the Government, the Chair could not, on the point of order, be expected to determine whether the effect would be to increase or lessen existing expenditures. The concrete fact of whether it does make a charge upon the Treasury is the point at issue on the question of order, and not simply the question of whether the bill is saving the money of the Nation or is spending it excessively.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think the gentleman from Kentucky is correct and, therefore, sustains the point of order. The bill will be placed upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I now yield for a moment to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scorr].

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture, reported the bill (H. R. 27053) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, which was read the first and second times and, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 1919), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia on the Union Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business, with Mr. Mann in the chair.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 12898.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a point of order that that bill-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12898) to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that bill is not on the Union Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair remembers, it has been a frequent ruling of the Chair, only recently made, that a bill transferred from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar can not be taken up for consideration, except by unanimous consent, until it is actually on the calendar; therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent that this bill be placed upon the Union Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12898 may be taken up for consideration by the Committee

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

Mr. SHERLEY. I object.

USE OF CORRIDORS, COURT-HOUSE-INAUGURATION.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up House joint resolution 200.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the joint resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) granting to the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard the use of the corridors of the court-house of the District of Columbia upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the marshal of the District.

Resolved, etc., That the marshal of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard to occupy and use the corridors of the court-house of the District of Columbia from 6 o'clock in the evening of March 3 to 7 o'clock in the evening of March 4, 1909, upon such terms and conditions as the marshal of the District shall impose upon the colonel of the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the short letter of the United States marshal read, which sheds all the light upon the situation that can be given, I think. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter designated.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, MARSHAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, D. C., December 15, 1908.

Washington, D. C., December 15, 1908.

Sir: Referring to your letter of the 14th Instant inclosing House joint resolution 200, providing the "granting to the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard the use of the corridors of the court-house of the District of Columbia upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the marshal of the District," for my examination and report, I beg leave to state that on several occasions heretofore at inauguration periods the Fifth Maryland Regiment has occupied the corridors of the court-house, no inconvenience whatever resulting to the courts or injury to the building in any way, and it gives me pleasure to recommend the passage of said resolution.

Very respectfully,

Aulick Palmer,
United States Marshal

AULICK PALMER, United States Marshal.

Mr. Lewis M. Miller, Clerk Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. I want to explain to this House that this is also a bill to set aside the law of 1902, which provided that no public buildings should be used for inaugural purposes. This simply repeals a general law. I know no reason why they should not use this building specially. Other bills will be presented to allow the use of public school buildings, and many of them will be presented, no doubt, before we get through, which virtually repeal the law of 1902; but with the spirit that is manifested by the House on the subject it is not worth while to oppose this bill. I suppose if the inaugural committee wanted a part of the White House, it would get it, and if it wanted a part of this Capitol, or anything else, it would get it; but in view of the vote of the Members of the House, when they would not even go on record as to the use of the Pension building, by refusing the year and nays, I do not see that there is any service to be rendered in opposing anything the inaugural committee wants.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

VETERAN VOLUNTEER FIREMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill S. 2024.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2024) to amend an act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association use of certain property in the city of Washington, approved March 2, 1891.

proved March 2, 1891.

Be it enacted, etc., That said act be amended so as to include both the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association and the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia in the use of all that part of lot 11, in square No. 141, in the city of Washington, and building thereon, occupied by a house used formerly as an engine house and described as follows: Beginning at the northeast corner of said lot and running east 30 feet on H street, thence 50 feet south on a line parallel to Nineteenth street, thence west 30 feet to Nineteenth street, and thence north 50 feet to the beginning; the same to be used by said associations as a place of meeting and for the storage of their property and belongings, consisting of fire apparatus, books, maps, pictures, files, souvenirs, mementos, and papers of historic interest, the same to continue during the pleasure of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out of line 9, page 1, the word "northeast" and insert in lieu thereof the word "northwest."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, this bill simply permits the Oldest Inhabitants' Association to occupy jointly with the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association a certain building that has heretofore been given over to the firemen's association for use and occupation. That firemen's association now say that their association will soon lose its identity by reason of death of its members, and they want some one to take care of the old apparatus and the antiques that are now in that building.

Mr. DRISCOLL. When does this volunteer firemen's association go out of activity?

Mr. CAMPBELL. As soon as the last members of the old association die, and I understand there are about 26 of them living, and they are anxious that the Oldest Inhabitants' Association, a perpetual society, be permitted to occupy these premises and take care of their relics.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What do you mean by "Oldest Inhabitants'

Association?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, that is an association of old citizens here in the District that has been organized and, I assume, chartered for the purpose of perpetuating their organization.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will not their organization go out of existence the same as the volunteer firemen's organization?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They will be succeeded by the oldest inhabitants continuously, as I understand their organization.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman explain what public purpose this organization serves? Why should the Government furnish them with a building for their use any more than any other of the several civic societies of the city?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is an old engine house now down on the river front, on the property described, that some years ago, by law or resolution, was given to the Volunteer Firemen's Association as a meeting place and a place in which to store old relics and the old fire apparatus, and those old relics and that old fire apparatus are still in that room. Mr. DRISCOLL. It is going to be somewhat of a museum? Mr. CAMPBELL. A sort of museum for antiquities of this

Mr. BRODHEAD. Is the building used for any other purpose?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No other purpose, and has not been for many years. The property is described as follows:

Beginning at the northwest corner

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is an old, abandoned brick building, is it, down here on the lot near the river, in which there is a lot of old fire apparatus; and if this bill passes, that will be taken care of; and if it does not, it will all go to ruin—the apparatus, building, and everything?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is the organization incorporated?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand it is. They claim they are a perpetual organization. The property is described as part of lot 11, in square 141, in the city of Washington, and building thereon now occupied by a house used only as an engine house, and described as follows:

Beginning at the northwest corner of said lot and running east 30 feet on H street; thence 30 feet south on a line parallel to Nineteenth street; thence west 30 feet to Nineteenth street, and thence north 50 feet to the beginning.

These associations only occupy this building during the pleasure of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not the Congress by passing this bill as it is, without reserving any right to repeal or amend, yield up its rights permanently to this property?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia can recall the use of that property at any time they see fit.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I know, but does not Congress yield up its jurisdiction over it?

Mr. CAMPBELL, Oh, so far as these two societies are concerned, I assume they do.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It seems to me that Congress should not do that. They should at least reserve the right to reappropriate it any time or convert it to any other use.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They can.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why do you not put that amendment in the

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a Senate bill, and every society in the city that has had notice of the matter at all urged that the bill be passed as it passed the Senate.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Can the commissioners annul this grant at any time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. Mr. BRODHEAD. Is the occupancy under their direction? Mr. CAMPBELL. It is only to be occupied by these societies during the pleasure of the commissioners.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the peculiar language in this bill. It says:

That said act be amended.

What act?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The act granting the use of the property to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not be amended if this bill passed, because there is nothing in the bill to identify the act. The title of the bill is not a part of the act. I would like to suggest to the gentleman to offer an amendment to strike out the words "said act," on line 3, page 1, and insert:

The act entitled "An act authorizing the commissioners to grant to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association the use of certain property in the city of Washington" be amended—

And so forth. Otherwise this bill will not accomplish anything.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York is very pertinent and proper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I notice this bill did not originate in the House. I doubt whether any bill originating in the House would have been drawn in such a way as not to accomplish at least the purpose designed. I suggest to the gentleman that an amendment should be adopted so as to designate the act that was to be amended.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will offer the amendment, I will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "The said act" and insert "An act entitled 'An act to authorize the commissioners to grant to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association the use of said property in the city of Washington."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Should not the act be designated in the

Mr. FITZGERALD. Add the words "approved March 2, 1891."

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

OBDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mann, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that comwhole House of the state of the Chical reported and had mittee had had under consideration H. J. Res. 202 and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and S. 2024, which it had directed him to report with amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

FIRE ESCAPES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 489.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 489, requesting certain information from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia relative to the enforcement of a law requiring the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Whereas a law was passed and approved March 19, 1906, which was amended, and which amendment was approved March 2, 1907, and reads as follows:

"An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved March 19, 1906, as amended by act of Congress approved March 2, 1907.

"Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the owner, entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building three or more stories in height, constructed or used or intended to be used as a tenement house, apartment house, flat, hotel, hospital, seminary, academy, school, college, institute, dormitory, asylum, sanitarium, hall or place of amusement, or office building, or store not exempted in this act hereinafter provided, to provide and cause to be erected and fixed to every such building, connected with each floor above the first floor by easily accessible and unobstructed openings, one or more suitable fire escapes, in such location and numbers and of such material, type, and construction as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may determine. (Amendment.)

(Amendment.)

"SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building used or intended to be used as set forth in section 1 of this act, or any building in which ten or more persons are employed, as set forth in section 2 of this act, where fire escapes are required, also to provide, install, and maintain humbers and of such type and character as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may determine. (Amendment.)

"SEC. 9. That any person failing or neglecting to provide fire escapes, alarm gongs, guide signs, fire hose, fire extinguishers, or other appliances required by this act, after notice from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia so to do, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, and shall be punished by a further fine of $5 for each day that he fails to comply with the notice aforesaid. Any person violating any other provision of this act shall be punished, upon conviction thereof, by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each offense.

"SEC. 10. That the said notice requiring the erection of fire escapes and other appliances mentioned in this act shall specify the character and number of fire escapes or other appliances to be provided, and in no case shall more than ninety days be allowed for compliance with said notice, unless the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall, in their discretion, deem it necessary to extend their time.

(Amendment in italics.)

"Sec. 12. That the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in term time or in vacation, may, upon a petition of the District of Columbia, filed by its said commissioners, issue an injunction to restrain the use or occupation of any building in the District of Columbia in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 13. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed. (Amendment.)" And

Whereas it has come to the notice of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives that many buildings coming within the provisions of the above act are now, and have been ever since the passage of said act, without fire escapes, alarm gongs, safety appliances, and other means of protection against fire, as required in said act: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States of America hereby request the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish the House of Representatives with the following information:

The approximate number of buildings within the District of Columbia coming within the provisions of the above act; the number of inspections made of such buildings; the number of notices sent to owners or agents of said buildings, as required by said act; and whether or not the apartments known as the Cumberland, Farragut, Brunswick, Stoneleigh Court, Calro, Connecticut, Ontario, Kenesaw, Iroquois, Alabama, Plymouth, and Lennox, and other large apartment houses, have been equipped with fire escapes, alarm gongs, fir

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows .

Page 6, line 5, after the word "owner," insert the words "entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control."

Mr. McGAVIN. Mr. Speaker, the object of this resolution is stated within it; but it may be necessary, or at least advisable, to briefly recite the history of this fire-escape legislation in the District of Columbia. As stated in the resolution, on March 19, 1906, an act was passed requiring the construction of fire escapes on all buildings more than three stories high. In March, 1907, an amendment was passed to that act excluding so-called "fireproof office buildings" from the operation of that law. Subsequently, in 1908, an amendment was offered to that act whereby it was sought to exclude all so-called "fireproof buildings" from the operation of the law. During the hearing before the sub-committee there developed that which I deem of such importance that I desire to call it to the mind of the gentlemen of this House.

Certain gentlemen appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia at our hearings who were sponsors for that amendment, and when I asked them whether or not the buildings in which they were interested had complied with the law in regard to the construction of fire escapes they answered "No." And when I asked them whether or not they had complied with the law in regard to alarm gongs and other safety appliances they answered "No." And they gave as their reasons for noncompliance with the law in regard to the construction of these fire escapes, first, the question of the expense, which seemed to be paramount to the safety of their tenants; secondly, that it would disfigure the buildings; and, thirdly—and the most important of all for us to know—that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had advised them not to construct the fire escapes, but that they would recom-mend the passage of an amendment whereby these fireproof buildings would be excluded from the operation of the law. That is the statement, and I have nothing but the gentleman's word for it; I do not make it on my own responsibility. If this is true, I submit that it is an outrage upon the law, perpetrated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, when they go to the violators of the law and say to them: "Your buildings need not conform to the law; we will endeavor to have the law conform to your buildings." They did not even place alarm gongs and things necessary in even fireproof buildings to warn the occupants of the building that the place was on fire, in order that they might have an opportunity to escape. I made a personal call upon the building inspector, and I found that in three years 135 notices had been sent out under this act, 500 inspections had been made altogether of buildings, that they had 18 men in the office and 2 inspectors of elevators, of which there are comparatively few in the District, and 1 man to inspect fire escapes, and that man was only appointed last July.

But they contend that fire escapes and safety appliances are not necessary in these so-called "fireproof buildings." Oh, what a soothing sound the words "fireproof buildings" have to the ears of the owners of premises and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Yet, how terrible it seems to gentlemen who, after great conflagrations in large cities, have seen these authority.

so-called "fireproof buildings" reduced to nothing but shapeless masses of molten beams and twisted iron girders. Yes, the Iroquois Theater in Chicago was a so-called "fireproof build-" yet almost 600 human beings, whose hearts were as susceptible to the sounds of sweet strains of music as yours or mine, were hurled unprepared into the throes of death, while the voice of mercy was crying out unheeded from the sky. The names of those victims have been erased from the roll of the living. Their spirits have been wafted away to that higher sphere, where those who stand responsible for "the deep damnation of their taking off," with their hands dripping with the the living. blood of slaughtered innocents, must meet their victims face to face, to answer for their conduct here on earth, before Him who is the judge of us all. It was not a case of fire escapes there, but of exits in case of fire. It was the neglect of the owner of the premises and the inspectors of the buildings. Gentlemen, we have a right to demand that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia enforce this law. We have a right to demand that the scores and hundreds of occupants of these great apartment houses here in the District of Columbia shall no longer be compelled unconsciously to flirt night and day with death in its most horrid form.

Gentlemen, I ask for the passage of this resolution. [Applause.1

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. McGAVIN. Yes.
Mr. DRISCOLL. From the gentleman's statement I would infer that the Commissioners of the District are not dreadfully in earnest in enforcing this law. Is not that so?

Mr. McGAVIN. I believe that is true. That is what I want to ascertain.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This resolution simply provides that the Commissioners of the District shall furnish to the House the information required, but it does not state at what time, whether within a month or within ten years.

Mr. McGAVIN. I think it says at the earliest practicable

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not see it in the resolution.

It is not customary to fix a time limit.

Mr. McGAVIN. I understand it is always customary for the commissioners to respond promptly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I know, but I supposed it was customary for them to obey the law, and yet I fear they have not done so. I move as an amendment that they furnish the information within ten days

Mr. McGAVIN. I have no objection to that.

That is an unnecessary reflection upon govern-Mr. MANN. ment officials.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not intend to reflect on them. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McGavin] in his remarks has reflected on the commissioners, and has substantially stated that they have winked at the law and have not enforced it. I simply say that, having done that once, possibly they may be disposed to do it again. It would seem as though this resolution ought to provide a time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will admit that the putting in of a time is only a matter of request, because this House in passing a resolution does not make law. All the House does is to give a direction to furnish information, which we have authority to do. We have no authority, so far as the law is con-

Mr. DRISCOLL. Have we not authority to say whether the information shall be furnished within ten, twenty, or thirty

Mr. MANN. We have no such authority, nor has any such custom ever prevailed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Whether it be the custom or not, I think it has been done in some cases. I will not say it is the universal practice; but in view of the fact that according to the versal practice; but in view of the fact that according to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois the law has been overlooked, has not been in force, has been winked at, it would seem as though it was proper enough to fix some time within which this information should be provided.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think you will find that the information will be furnished forthwith.

The House the other day passed a resolution Mr. MANN. requesting another branch of the Government to furnish information, but I am credibly informed that it will take that branch of the Government, with all its force, five or six years to get together the information asked for by the House.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How long will this require?
Mr. McGAVIN. I think we will have it in a week.
Mr. DRISCOLL. Why not put it in within ten days?

Mr. MANN. It is a bad precedent, and we have not any such

Mr. DRISCOLL. We certainly have the authority, if we care

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist on his amendment. I have no doubt that the information will be furnished within a reasonable time.

Mr. MANN. There is in the resolution the sentence "and the reason why steps have not been taken to enforce the law," and so forth. It is not customary for Congress to call upon an executive department to state the reasons why they do not or do do such things. In other words, it is not the custom of Congress to permit an executive or administrative officer, in giving information, to argue his side of the case. Does the gentleman think it is essential to have that clause in his resolution, and give an opportunity for the commissioners to state at length the basis or possible argument one way or the other, after stating the facts which the gentleman wishes to obtain?

Mr. McGAVIN. It was only on the information I had that I assumed that the law was not enforced. I want to see, if possible, whether or not statements made to the subcommittee—if not directly, inferentially—that they had been advised by the commissioners not to construct the fire escapes until they ascertained whether a law would be passed excluding their buildings

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is a good precedent in calling for information to ask the officer to argue the question to the House.

Mr. McGAVIN. I want to give the commissioners all the opportunity in the world to explain this if there is any explanation they can make.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the commissioners have insisted on some people complying with the law, while others have been allowed to go free?

Mr. McGAVIN. I have no doubt about that. Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I know a hotel on the corner of Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I know a note: on the corner of Fourteenth street and New York avenue, or H street, where they insisted upon having the hotel people comply with the law. The landlord made an expenditure of at least $1,500 to construct fire escapes where there was no absolute necessity for it. Right around the corner, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, there is another hotel which has no fire escape and has never complied with the law at all.

Mr. McGAVIN. Perhaps the first one does not come within

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Yes; it does.

Mr. McGAVIN. There is no exception to any hotel; it simply excludes office buildings where people work in the

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. An explanation was asked of the engineer of the District as to why he had been compelled to comply with the law, and his neighbor, almost the next door, had not been compelled to do it. He said that the only explanation he could give him was, "I suppose you are a better citizen than the other party." In other words, the man could comply with the law if he wanted to; and if he did not, he need not, no matter how great the necessity might be. I think the firematter how great the necessity might be. I think the fire-escape law would be a good thing if properly enforced. Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman favor putting a fire escape on this building, which comes within the law?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I would not have it apply to any particular building; let everybody comply with the law.

Mr. McGAVIN. I do not believe this building would come within the act.

Yes; if occupied by a private concern.

Mr. MANN. Yes; if occupied by a private concern.
Mr. McGAVIN. I presume this might be construed as an office building.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is there a law in the District, and if so, what is it, requiring that no stairway in any hotel or public building shall be carried around an elevator shaft?

Mr. McGAVIN. There is such a law; it is in this law, but

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I read of a fire in Topeka, Kans., the other day which resulted in the death of some individuals and serious injury to others. Those on the third and fourth floors in endeavoring to escape—and they were speedily alarmed—were unable to escape down the stairway, because the the stairway was built around an elevator shaft, which acts as a chimney, and in endeavoring to go down they were smothered. I know of some buildings of considerable prominence in this Capital City of the United States in which, when a fire breaks out, as it is likely to at any time, there is going to be a terrible loss of life. It strikes me as most remarkable that any such condition is allowed to exist in this city-of stairways in inflammable structures being allowed to be constructed around elevator shafts, absolutely preventing any escape for people above the third floor.

Mr. McGAVIN. That comes within this act.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman stated that there were two men to inspect elevators, and only one to inspect fire escapes. Does the gentleman know whether there is appropriation enough

Mr. McGAVIN. I do not know what the condition of the appropriation is, but I will say that this work has been done indiscriminately by first one clerk and then another; never a man appointed for that specific work until last July.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it claimed by the commissioners that there is not money enough to provide men for this inspection work?

Mr. McGAVIN. There was no reason given to me for that.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman inform me whether or not the law which he proposes to have enacted will cover the buildings that are rented and used by the Government for public purposes?

Mr. McGAVIN. They are not excluded, although they are not mentioned.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why I ask the question is this: I listened to the gentleman's speech with a great deal of pleasure; and I wondered if these helpless old men and old women who are working in the departments would have a fire escape to get themselves out of these rat traps that we are renting around here for $471,000 a year, if a fire occurred in them, and also if putting up fire escapes would not aid them as well as the fire department in getting out of these buildings the public records that have been burned and will again burn in these rat traps.

Mr. McGAVIN. There is no question but that the more numerous the exits the better chance people have to get out.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly. It seems to me, as we are renting so many of these buildings, perhaps without fire escapes—I do not know, I hope they have, but I do not believe it—the Government itself would be greatly aided in protecting its otherwise unprotected property, papers, and so forth, if we were to put up these fire escapes, laying aside the humanity and justice of the plan. So I am going to vote for the gentleman's proposition as a good step.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGAVIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In reference to the form of the resolution, may I ask the gentleman if it is essential to the purpose of the gentleman to repeat this law in hec verba?

Mr. McGAVIN. It was not, except that I wanted to call to the minds of the House that the whole proposition-

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman has already accomplished that purpose. Would it not satisfy the gentleman just as well to strike out all except the title to the bill? For instance, I read I do not know upon what theory it is put together. The gentleman has at the end of some sections, in parentheses, the word "Amendment," and in some of them "Amendment in italics." It is impossible for any gentleman to read that and understand what it means.

Mr. McGAVIN. I do not know how that word "Amendment" got inserted in there after each paragraph, but that is the law as it stands to-day.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how some of it got to be italicized and some not?

Mr. McGAVIN. No.

Mr. MANN. Then I suggest to the gentleman that instead of leaving that in, which amounts to nothing, the gentleman having already called the attention of the House to the language of the law having it already in, that he amend the preamble by striking out all except the reference to the act itself.

Mr. McGAVIN. That is the reason why I made the motion to dispense with the reading of the act, because I assumed that the gentleman would know the law.

Mr. MANN. And that is the reason I wanted to hear it read, because I wanted to know what the act was.

Mr. McGAVIN. It was not only the question of fire escapes which I wanted to bring in, but the question of fire extinguishers and notices served and everything.

Mr. MANN. Of course the original act quoted here is no part of the gentleman's resolution. When we say-

Whereas a law was passed and approved March 19, 1906, which was amended, and which amendment was approved March 2, 1907—

we have given a reference and all that is necessary for the purpose of the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. McGAVIN. Well, it may make the resolution a little Mr. MANN. It will not make the resolution any longer,

Mr. McGAVIN. It makes the document a little longer. Put it in that way. I can not see any good reason why it should be stricken out.

Mr. MANN. As it is now the enrolling and engrossing clerks will not know what to do with it.

Mr. McGAVIN. It ought to be made clear to those who are not familiar with the law, and that is the reason why it was put in there, and I do not see what confusion it will cause in the enrolling clerk's room.

Mr. MANN. I can very readily see what it would cause. On page 6 it is provided:

That in case of failure or refusal of the owner entitled to the bene-ficial use, rental, or control of any building specified in this act to comply with the requirements of the notice provided for in section 10—

And at the bottom we find, "(Amendment in italics)." one can tell that that is a part of the original law. It is not the duty of the enrolling clerks to look up the law and see whether this complies with the law.

Mr. McGAVIN. I assume that some enrolling clerk must be responsible for that, for that is exactly as the law appears in the code to-day.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not find it written in the law in italics. Nor will he find at the bottom of it, "(Amendment in italics)." That is something that the gentleman inadvertently or purposely incorporated here, and which has served its

Mr. McGAVIN. No; I had no object in doing that at all. I simply put the act in as it was in the code and as amended.

Mr. MANN. Well, it may be the commissioners have access to the cede and the law, and they can find the law if you refer to it by the date it was passed.

Mr. McGAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, commencing, on page 1, with the words "and reads as follows."

The SPEAKER. That is, of the preamble.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the first vote is on the resolution. The SPEAKER. The preamble will be disposed of after the resolution. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, commencing, on page 1 of the preamble, with the words "and reads as follows," down to just above the word "and," near the bottom of page 6, so as to strike out the recital of existing law.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to strike out all of the preamble?

Mr. MANN. Oh, not all of the preamble, but to strike out all of the recital of existing law.

The SPEAKER. Commencing with the words "an act," on page 1, and ending where, on page 6?

Mr. MANN. Just down to the word "and," immediately above the last paragraph on page 6, including the words in section 13.

The SPEAKER. Including section 13?

Mr. MANN. Yes; including section 13.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move to strike out all of the first "whereas?"

Mr. MANN. Oh, leave in the first "whereas" down to the "nineteen hundred and seven." words

The SPEAKER. Strike out after the word "seven" the words "and reads as follows?"

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. And all after that goes out, including the balance of the preamble?

Mr. MANN. Well, the last preamble I do not ask to be stricken out, so I will leave in the last "whereas."

The SPEAKER. Then, on page 6, strike out the following:

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are, hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN. Down to and including that.

The SPEAKER. Then pick it up again with the next "whereas?"

Leaving the second "whereas" in. Mr. MANN.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McGAVIN. Mr. Speaker, not seeing what good this will do, I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. McGAVIN. Division, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 27054) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second times and, with the accompanying report (No. 1923), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves all points of order upon the bill.

CHANGE OF NAME AND JURISDICTION, JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 6359.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6359) to change the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The said clerk shall keep a docket similar to the one heretofore pro-yided for justices of the peace.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this amendment should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is brought in in the nature of a substitute to a bill that was there considered and then reported. It makes charges on the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule provides that any bill making charges directly or indirectly on the Treasury must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. This bill has been so considered and then was reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. gentleman then offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute which indirectly and directly imposes a charge upon the Treasury

The SPEAKER. But this bill has been considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that while this point may not be very clearly covered by the rules, it is yet analogous to amendment by the Senate to the bill. Senate amendments should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, although the original bill would not require to be there considered. Now, this bill is in the House, and the gentleman offers an amendment which under the rules, if it were originally in the bill or which if it came over as a Senate amendment, must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not make the point that the amendment is not germane?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether it is or not.

do not know whether anybody could tell. It strikes out all after the enacting clause-

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand. This bill was considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and reported back to the House with a certain amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to. Now, that is a report from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Now, the gentleman in charge of the bill moves by way of amendment and substitute "to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following." And now the gentleman suggests that that substitute which the gentleman in charge of the bill has offered makes a charge upon the Treasury, and therefore the substitute should, on the point of order, go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state

Mr. FITZGERALD. Precisely.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman claim that there is any new matter in the substitute that was not in the original bill? Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to state that, as I have never seen it. It has been read here at some length, but I do not believe that anybody knows that except the author of the

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I will state for the information of the gentleman that there is nothing in the substitute offered that is new. The matters contained in the substitute were all considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the bill was in that committee.

The SPEAKER. If that be correct, the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the rule covers Senate amendments of a similar character, even though the amendments have been considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill?
Mr. CAMPBELL. This is a Senate bill.
The SPEAKER. This is a House amendment to the Senate bill and proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause, as the Chair understands, and to insert the substitute which has been read, and which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMP-BELL] says was substantially considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule says nothing about "substantially considered," if the Chair please. It is a knotty question, so far as I am informed, although I have not looked it up. The question is, Can the gentleman bring before the House in this way provisions which, if in the bill originally, must be considered in the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not look to ascertain whether the amendment is substantially the same or practically the same as the bill. If the proposed substitute makes a charge upon the Treasury, this particular amendment must be conthe Union. The Chair is of the opinion that if the subject has been considered in substance by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, resulting in the recommendation of that committee, the amendment to the bill, like all other reports from committees, is subject to amendment. And the gentleman from Kansas states that the matters covered by the substitute have been considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair can not state without closer examination. But the gentleman from New York does not controvert the statement of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not challenge the accuracy of the statement made, but from my standpoint it is immaterial whether the amendment is substantially the same. The SPEAKER. The Chair would be inclined to overrule the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York seems to think it depends upon whether the precise language of the amendment to the bill was considered in the Committee of the Whole, whereas I take the universal rule to be whether the subjectmatter in proper form was considered in Committee of the Whole. If the gentleman's proposition should be true, the House never could amend a bill reported from the Committee of the Whole, because the moment you offer an amendment you must go back to the Committee of the Whole. Now, in this case the whole subject-matter was considered in the Committee of the Whole. Everything with reference to the Senate bill and House amendments was considered in Committee of the Whole. I do not see how it is possible to send it back and ever get through legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield the floor or yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I opposed the bill when it was pending before. I did not understand it as well then as I do now. It had some features I opposed then I would not oppose But I am informed, and get it also from newspapers, that the business people, those who have business in these courts in Georgetown, have entered a protest with the com-missioners opposing this bill. They want one of these justices' courts over there.

Now, in Committee of the Whole we amended the bill in several important particulars, all of which now go out under this substitute. I am not opposed to legislation along the line of the bill; but I think it ought to be better considered and ought to provide for the necessities of the people who have litigation as well as the justices who hold the court. The House, in Committee of the Whole, reduced the number of judges to three. Now, I have assurance by way of letters from gentlemen who practice before these courts, but which we have not time to consider in this way, that three justices of the peace, converted into a judge's court, are a sufficient number to discharge all the duties of their office if clerks are provided to do the clerical work these justices now have to perform and if they were not to be designated to act as police judges. I think that ought to be done. When the bill was considered in the Committee of the Whole, we amended it so as to provide that the justices of the peace should be appointed from bona fide citizens of the District.

Now, this substitute comes in and virtually overrules and overrides the House in Committee of the Whole when we considered and reported it to the House with that amendment. Now, the previous question can be called upon the substitute and a vote taken. This method of legislation virtually evades consideration in Committee of the Whole when bills are reported with amendments. When the bill comes back into the House, the previous question can be called on an amendment. Debate can only be had by grace of the gentleman who has charge of I think it is a bad way to legislate. I think it ought not to be adopted. Let us go along and consider this bill in the usual way. It ought to be considered with an opportunity to make the proper amendments or, at least, retain the amendments that were made after long deliberation and discussion, and not overrule the Committee of the Whole in this way. think the bill can be perfected and will be of benefit. I do not think the substitute ought to be adopted in its present form. I think we ought to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, and that the bill should be passed as reported by Committee of the Whole after an hour or two hours' consideration. Therefore I hope that the substitute will be voted down.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bates].

BATES, Mr. Chairman, these justices tried 21,337 cases last year, an increase of 2,785 cases over the preceding year. In 1903 the total number of cases were 14,327, and an increase of 33 per cent in the cases tried in their courts for the last four years.

Mr. Chairman, three justices can not perform these duties, and the only change made by this substitute is to substitute the word "five" for the original "six" and the word "three," as it is now reduced in the bill. It also provides that the expenses of this court shall at no time exceed the revenues of the court and shall not be a charge on the Government of the United States.

Mr. SIMS. That is in the other bill, as reported. This bill does not provide that this court shall be appointed from bona fide citizens.

Mr. BATES. But this, as I understand it, does not change a letter or cross a "t" in that respect. It is the same as in the other bill, with the exception that it provides for five justices instead of three, as was voted for the other day.

Mr. SIMS. But it says "residents" of this city, but not "bona fide citizens."

Mr. BATES. It says that those who shall be eligible for those appointments shall have been practitioners for the last five years before this court.

Mr. SIMS. They need not be citizens.

Mr. BATES. Is there any such thing as citizenship in the

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; there is. Mr. SIMS. There is such a thing as not being a citizen of Mr. BATES. This is not a State.

Mr. SIMS. A man from your State may be appointed and may vote up there and work in politics up there and come down here and hold court.

But the law requires that they shall be resi-Mr. BATES.

dents and practitioners in this court five years.

Mr. SIMS. Judges of the Supreme Court here continue to exercise functions of citizens in the States from which they came here in some cases.

Mr. BATES. I do not quarrel with the gentleman on that. The point I make is that three judges are inadequate.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated the number of cases heard by these justices last year.

Mr. BATES. Twenty-one thousand three hundred and thirtyseven.

Mr. MANN. If there were only three justices, that would be 7,000 cases to a justice.

Mr. BATES. To be disposed of.

Mr. MANN. Which would be about 25 cases a day, unless you figured every possible day of the year outside of Sundays.

Mr. BATES. Yes; and that would be ridiculous.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A large proportion of these cases are landlord and tenant cases that are not litigated at all.

Mr. BATES. Many of them. Under the law these justices have to be assigned to take the place of the police-court judges and also the juvenile-court judges, aside from their own duties.

Mr. SIMS. They ought to be relieved of that.
Mr. BATES. They ought to be relieved of that, the gentleman from Tennessee says, but they are not relieved of that. That burden is upon them; and when assigned, they have to respond to the call to take the place of the police-court judges and the juvenile-court judges during the absence, vacation, or sickness of any of those judges.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, one of them is assigned a couple of months a year, at least, to the police court.

Mr. BATES. Yes. The bill as reported, with three justices, would be so inadequate as to make it ridiculous.

Mr. SIMS. If you relieve them of the clerical work, the three can do more than six men who have to do clerical work as they are now doing it.

Mr. BATES. The secretary of a special committee of the Bar Association writes:

The increased jurisdiction proposed will necessarily increase the number of cases. At present the justices have to do their own clerical work. They keep their dockets and cash accounts and prepare their own writs. They can doubtless try more cases when relieved of writing papers, keeping books, and counting cash; but if two are liable to be drafted to preside in the police court when the justices of that court desire a holiday, as the law now permits, it will be readily seen that three justices will be unable to do the work.

In addition to that, the clerk to be appointed is the clerk of the whole court. They do not each have a clerk. The clerk to be appointed will keep the docket of every case that is tried. When these justices sit this clerk will divide up the docket between the five, so that they will all be at work. As it is now, one district may be crowded, with five or six thousand cases in a year, and another district, geographically as large, have only half or a third as many cases brought, so that now their duties are unequal. But the provision of this bill is that the clerk will equally divide the docket up between these justices who are sitting, and in that way they may do equal work.

Mr. SIMS. You had better have two more clerks at $1,500 than two more judges at $2,500.

Mr. BATES. I think not. Mr. SIMS. Then they would have no clerical work to do at all. Mr. BATES. Under the provisions of the bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole the other day the proposition is ridiculous. I am satisfied that three judges would be entirely inadequate. Five judges, the compromise agreed upon—one less than the present number-can, I believe, do the work comfortably for the present, if they have a clerk to docket all the cases and assign them among the different judges. I hope, therefore, this being substantially the only change made by the amendment by way of substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas, that it will be adopted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes].

Mr. Hughes of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, this is the same proposition we discussed in Committee of the Whole House the other day. At that time I stated the situation as it exists in my city, where we have about 120,000 population, where a district court judge has exclusive jurisdiction in the city and con-current jurisdiction throughout the whole county. That judge sits two days a week, and he usually finishes up his calendar of cases in about half of a working day. He is provided with a clerk also.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bates] states the number of cases to be handled by these judges, and it shows that it comes to about 25 cases per day apiece. Anybody who has sat around a municipal court of that character and seen the ease with which the ordinary cases are disposed of, many of which never come to trial at all, and others in which judgments are obtained by default, knows that probably only 1 in every 25 cases actually is tried, and perhaps not 1 in 100 cases comes to a jury trial. It is plain to me, in spite of what the gentle-man from Pennsylvania has said, that three judges would be ample to perform this work.

I will make this proposition: I will get the man who tries cases in our court at home to come here for the salary that is paid these three judges and try them all himself.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Certainly

Mr. BATES. Does not the gentleman think there is a great deal of force in the criticism made by President-elect Taft and others against the law's delay, and that the parties to these suits are entitled to a speedy trial of their cases, and that justice should not be delayed as it has been many times in the two or three years past?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I have only five minutes, but will say to the gentleman that the delays are not always caused by too much litigation; it is often caused by a lack of willingness of the judges to go on and do the work. We do not have these delays in my city.

Mr. BATES. In two of these districts at present they are congested and can not hear the cases speedily.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. If you have a capable judge, he can do it. I want to say that the judge to whom I have referred is doing half as much work as you are going to have five men do, and he does it in two days a week. There is no congested calendar there. This proposition is merely to provide places for two additional judges, and if the House wants to do it nothing more need be said, but I think there ought to be an end to the oft-made assertion that these appointments are necessary to clear up the calendar. They are not necessary, in my judgment. The three men recommended by the Committee of the Whole House would be ample, if they want to do the

Mr. BATES. Does the gentleman take into consideration the increase in the concurrent jurisdiction that that will increase the number of cases brought?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. We increased the jurisdiction from three to five hundred within the last two years, but the same judge is trying all the cases.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman from New Jersey can not controvert the fact that there were nearly 22,000 cases brought in these courts last year. Was there any such proportion of litigation before the justice in the town which the gentleman re-

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I should say that he had about his fair proportion, speaking from my recollection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say that my colleague from New York was municipal judge for some years, and he disposed of Mr. BENNET of New York. Perhaps I ought to call attention to the fact that I was not reelected.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting the words "citizen and" in line 4, following the words "bona fide," so that it will read "bona fide citizen and resident."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman modify his amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; to that extent. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, end of line 4, insert "citizen and," so as to read "bona fide citizen and resident of said District."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment and bill to its final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill, and stands upon a report from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the recommendation that certain amendments shall be agreed to. The gentleman from Kansas offers a substi-tute for the bill, which would leave the amendments that are recommended by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union without action. So that it seems to the Chair that the original should be perfected before the question is taken on the substitute. Therefore the question will be on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have those amendments read before they are voted upon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendments.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMS) there were-ayes 45, noes 39.

So the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole House were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment before that; he offered an amendment to the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the gentleman modified his amendment, making it a part of the original. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMS) there were-ayes 60, noes 51.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present. The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Door-keeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in absentees, the yeas and nays will be ordered, and the question will be taken on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 141, nays 96, answered "present" 10, not voting 139, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THE VETERAN VOLUNTEER FIREMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2024, and ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Townsend). The gentleman from Michigan calls up the bill which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2024) to amend an act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association use of certain property in the city of Washington, approved March 2, 1891.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that bill that it should be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This bill has been considered in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been considered in the Committee of the Whole House and recommended to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

USE OF CORRIDORS OF COURT-HOUSE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up House joint resolution 200.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the same. The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 200.

Granting to the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard the use of the corridors of the court-house of the District of Columbia upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the marshal of the District.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF PENSIONERS OF METROPOLITAN POLICE FUND.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 23973

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23973) for the relief of pensioners of the Metropolitan police fund.

police fund.

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount withheld from pensioners of the police fund on account of deficiencies in said fund during the period from June 1, 1894, to May 31, 1896, is authorized to be paid, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle all claims for said deficiencies in the payment of allowances made by them to pensioners of said police fund, and report to Congress their conclusions for consideration. In case of death of any beneficiary under the provisions of this bill the amount due such beneficiary shall be paid to the legal representative thereof.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out of lines 10 and 11, page 1, the words "and report to Congress their conclusions for consideration," and insert a period after the word "fund," in line 10.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill is not properly on the House Calendar, but belongs to the Union Calendar. While the bill does not itself direct out of what fund payment shall be made, it provides that certain amount withheld because of deficiencies in that police fund during a certain period shall be paid, and the Commissioners of the District are authorized and directed to adjust and settle all claims for said deficiencies. There is no fund out of which these deficiencies may be paid; and giving the authority to the District Commissioners to adjust and settle claims puts a charge, as I take it, and makes it practically an audited claim, and one-half of that would have to be paid out of the General This bill does not confine the payment out of the Treasury. This bill does not confine the payment out of the pension fund, and that question was raised on previous bills as to whether a bill to pay this out of the pension fund was properly on the House Calendar, but this bill does not even confine it to the pension fund.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan say there is a fund out of which this is to be paid?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, then, feels bound to sustain the point of order.

IMPERIAL PALACE, DRAMATIC ORDER KNIGHTS OF KHORASSAN.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 23707.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23707) to incorporate the Imperial Palace, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan.

Be it enacted, etc., That Daniel F. Summey, jr., of the city of Charlotte, State of North Carolina; William Beatty, of the city of Toledo, State of Ohio; Thomas H. Hineline, of the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota; Henry W. Belding, of the city of Webster Groves, State of Missouri; Charles V. Stansbury, of the city of Los Angeles, State of California; John Hallowell Dickinson, of the city of Richmond, State of Virginia; Charles E. Rice, of the city of Buffalo, State of New York; George F. Eubanks, of the city of Atlanta, State of Georgia; Joseph A. Solomons, of the city of Grand Rapids, State of Michigan; Estil D. Guffy, of the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma; Frank R. Lander, of the city of Cleveland, State of Ohio; and Gus Meese, of the city of Spokane, State of Washington, officers and members of the Imperial Palace, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate in the District of Columbia, by the name of "The Imperial Palace, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan," and by that name may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, in any court of law or equity, and may have and use a common seal, and change the same at pleasure, and be entitled to use and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges incidental to fraternal and benevolent corporations within the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the said corporation shall have power to take and hold real and personal estate not exceeding in value $100,000, which shall not be divided among the members of the corporation, but shall descend to their successors for the promotion of the fraternal and benevolent purposes of said corporation.

SEC. 3. That all claims, accounts, debts, things in action or other matter; as business of whatever nature now existing for or against the present Imperial Palace, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan, mentioned in section 1 of the act, shall survive and succeed to and against the body corporate and politic hereby created: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed to extend the operation of any law which provides for the extinguishing of claims or contracts by limitation of time.

SEC. 4. That said corporation shall have a constitution and shall have power to amend the same at pleasure: Provided, That such constitution or amendments thereof do not conflict with the laws of the United States or of any State.

SEC. 5. That said corporation may provide for meetings of its legislative or governing body wherever such association shall have subordinate bodies, and all business transacted at such meetings shall be valid in all respects as if such meetings were held within said District.

SEC. 6. That the general offices of said corporation shall be in the District of Columbia or in any State where the secretary of the corporation may reside.

poration may reside.

SEC. 7. That said corporation shall not engage in any business for gain, the purposes of said corporation being fraternal and benevolent.

SEC. 8. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the Dramatic Order of the Knights of Khorassan was organized in 1895. It has branches in every State in the Union, with the exception of five, and I am in-formed that in three of those five steps have already been taken to organize branches. The purpose of the bill is to incorporate the organization by a United States statute.

While the committee felt some doubt as to the advisability of favoring this class of legislation, upon investigation they found that there had been a number of bills passed to incorporate fraternal and benevolent organizations of a similar character to this. On the 13th day of March, 1896, an act to incorporate the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree of Scottish Rite Masonry for the southern jurisdiction of the United States was passed; an act to incorporate the trustees of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States was approved February 4, 1905; and an act to incorporate the Great Council of the United States of the Improved Order of Red Men was approved April 16, 1906. So Congress has been in the habit of passing this kind of legislation.

The parent organization, namely, the Knights of Pythias, was started in the District of Columbia. No man who is not a member of the Knights of Pythias is eligible to membership in this dramatic order, which bears the same relationship to that order as the order of Knights of the Mystic Shrine bears to Masonry. I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will pass. Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will. Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, it is true, as the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] has stated, that there are precedents for the passage of bills somewhat of the character of this, but I venture to call the attention of Members of the House to the fact that no bill of a character similar to this has heretofore passed over the protest and against the recommendation of the District Commissioners. And I call attention to the fact that the Commissioners of the District do protest against the passage of this bill. Their letter is set out in full in the report.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the bill seek to do? Mr. GARRETT. The bill seeks to incorporate a benevolent association or society. I know nothing of the society, but I presume that it is a good association and a benevolent one. have heretofore opposed all these incorporations. I am against it as a matter of policy, and, with the permission of the House, I wish to read, for the benefit of any who may not have seen the report, this report of the commissioners; and I ask for order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MADDEN. The object of the organization is legitimate, is it?

Mr. GARRETT. I so understand it-benevolent and fraternal.

Mr. KAHN. It is not an insurance organization.
Mr. GARRETT. The letter of the commissioners, written to the committee, reads this way:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

Washington, December 31, 1908.

Dear Sir: The commissioners have the honor to state in reply to your reference to them for examination and report H. R. 23707, "To incorporate the Imperial Palace, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan," that in their opinion the proposed legislation is unnecessary and undesirable.

The bill only asks that the corporation be "entitled to use and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges incidental to fraternal and benevolent corporations within the District of Columbia. It would be useless to grant those powers, etc., by special act when they may be obtained by incorporating under the general laws of the District, which are themselves acts of Congress. Such legislation is particularly objectionable because of the great tendency to use it for advertising purposes. In the opinion of the insurance department, the District of Columbia has already been embarrassed even by insurance companies and societies which have been incorporated under the general law, and have circulated prospectuses and policies throughout the country representing that they were "incorporated under the laws of the United States in the District of Columbia."

It would appear that the only special privilege asked is that the provision of the code to the effect that one-third of the incorporators shall be residents of the District be waived. As no resident of the District is named as an incorporator, and as the bill provides that the general offices of the corporation may be located in any State, it is evident that it is not intended to have them in the District. In such an event no provision would be made for service of legal process on the officers.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. Smith, Chairman of Committee on District of Columbia, House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. I would like to have two or three minutes

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I suppose, of course, that this bill, like many of the other similar bills that have been before Congress during my brief service here, will pass, but I am firmly of the opinion that it is bad policy and that it ought to be broken up by the House, and that now is a good time to begin. This, so far as I remember, is the first bill to create a special corporation or a corporation by a special act, that has arisen in the Sixtieth Congress. A number of them passed in the Fifty-ninth Congress. They were stoutly resisted by several gentlemen on the floor, and I had hoped that that resistance had borne fruit, and that we would have no more of this very bad and very dangerous legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.
Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman read something from the commissioners as to this being one of the benevolent insurance orders

Mr. GARRETT. No; the commissioners do not say this is an insurance order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is not, from what I can see of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not understand it is. It is a benevolent society, whose purposes are no doubt meritorious. But the point is that they can incorporate under the general laws of the District of Columbia by complying with the requirement as to the correct number of local directors, and there is no reason why this society or any other society should be given the prestige of a special act of incorporation passed by the Congress which sets aside the provisions of the carefully considered code of the District.

Mr. SMTTH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ashbrook].

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is passed, as I believe it should be, it will simply give to the Imperial Palace, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan, the same rights and privileges as nearly every other secret society of any importance or consequence now enjoys under the federal law. holds and sustains about the same relationship to that great order, the Knights of Pythias, which was organized in the city of Washington and for which a similar act has heretofore been passed, as the Shrine does to the Masonic bodies.

None but Pythians are eligible to membership in this order, and none but good men are good Pythians. I may here state that many Members of this Congress-not only of the House, but of the Senate, including the author of this bill—are members of the "D. O. K. K.," as it is more commonly called; but whether this fact is to the credit of the order or an argument in favor of the passage of this bill, I will not now say. The District of Columbia Committee, as has been stated by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], finds that numerous other secret societies have heretofore had an act similar to this passed in their behalf. We also find that many organizations and societies other than secret societies have come to Congress with similar bills that have been passed, including the National Educational Association, the Women's Club Federation, and the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The District Commissioner and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] evidently confuse this bill with societies organized for the purpose of conducting insurance. The Dramatic Order of Knights of Khorassan does not have any beneficial features attached to it save those of better fellowship and friendship among its members.

It does not so much as even compel the payment of sick benefits to its members. It is therefore in no sense an insurance Its object is to help others and to assist the members to do bigger and better things, to do good things while they may, to give flowers to the living rather than heap them upon their caskets. Its motto is "to lift up the fallen; ' and surely even Congress will not wish to retard so noble a work for humanity's sake. The order is now incorporated under the laws of Illinois, but by the passage of this act it can move its offices from one State to another without being subjected to the expense and annoyance of applying for a charter to each State to which its offices are to be removed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the parent order, the Knights of Pythias, was organized and established in the city of Washington, I take it that this auxiliary body will be subject to and entitled to the same fair consideration at your hands that so many other secret societies have heretofore had.

and will be promptly passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the letter of the commissioners quoted by the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman from Ohio, who has just taken his seat, has fully covered the ground with reference to the purposes of this bill and the necessities for its passage. I want to say that the commissioners, in their letter, seem to plant their opposition upon the supposition that this incorporation will be used for advertising purposes. This organization, of which I have the honor to be a member, does not advertise. There is nothing in its business to be advertised; it is not a commercial proposition in any sense of the word, and there is no insurance feature in connection with it.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think it is a fair construction of the language of the commissioners to say that they insist that this particular bill will be used as a basis for advertising. They speak of the legislation in general in granting special charters.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Do they not seek to apply it to this

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think the language properly bears that interpretation. Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is a matter for construction. If the commissioners do not mean to apply the language to this bill, then they ought not to have used it in a discussion of this bill, and they should not give that as a reason why this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from Florida permit me?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly. Mr. KAHN. The letter of the commissioners states that under the general law insurance companies incorporated in the District have used that fact for advertising, not by special act of Congress, but incorporated under general law.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And they are urging their fear that this incorporation may be used for advertising as an argument against the passage of the bill. If they are not using it for that purpose it should have no place in their letter. I am not one of those, Mr. Speaker, who believe, as the gentleman from Tennessee evidently does, that this Congress ought not to pass anything to which the commissioners object.

I am not ready yet to delegate to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia my right as a Representative upon this floor to express myself upon pending legislation and vote upon it irrespective of the recommendations they may make. say in their letter that the only special privilege asked by this -and I think that is true-is the waiver of the requirement of the general law that a particular number of the incorporators shall reside in the District. To require them to comply with the general law in that respect would work a hardship upon this order, and that is the real purpose of their asking for its incorporation in this way. I hope the bill will pass

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, while the gentleman from Tennessee fears this may be a precedent for further legislation, I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that whenever any other order comes to this House with the same claim for consideration that the people who are requesting this act do, if I am here at the time I will be glad to use this as a precedent for giving a charter to that kind of an association also.

I am not afraid of the precedent. I am surprised at the action of the commissioners in turning this proposition down, so far as they could turn it down. The very object of this in-corporation is to make it national, as it should be, so that it will not have to be moved from State to State. To go in under the general law and have a large number of incorporators in the city of Washington would be an injustice to the membership in other States. Not only that, but no man can be a member of the Knights of Khorassan unless he is first a Knight of Pythias in good standing, so that it is a winnowing out, and the best, I assume, are retained. It is for that order something like the Shriners for the Masonic order. The Masonic order, as you all know, is long established. The Shriners are the fellows who devote themselves to having a better time than the other members of the order, and I imagine that the Knights of Khorassan do that also. As a Knight of Pythias I was elected to the Knights of Khorassan many years ago, but was so afraid of the initiation that I have never reported for the degree. If I were younger I would take advantage of such election. [Laughter.] It seems to me that this bill can do no possible harm. It does not interfere with any business organization or any benevolent organization in the District of Columbia. It is Nation wide in scope, and the bill ought to pass, and I believe will pass.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, a great many years ago, when I was a lad, I read a somewhat popular poem, known as "Lalla Rookh," and in that was a character known as the "Veiled Prophet of Khorassan." I should like some of the proponents of this bill to inform the House whether these Knights of Khorassan are in any way related to that veiled If they are, to my mind this is not a reputable organization that Congress ought to stop in its public business for the purpose of giving legal sanction to. That gentleman, so far as I now remember, was a very disreputable old wretch. [Laugh-He was a mysterious person, as these knights are. purposes of his existence were as veiled as was his face. These gentlemen do not see fit to tell us what power it is they want to be invested with. They tell us that they want to be permitted to use and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges incidental to fraternal and benevolent corporations within the District of Columbia. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that is very vague and uncertain. What are the rights; what are the privileges that corporations of a benevolent character may exercise in this District? I confess that I do not know.

I am not at all assured that the gentlemen of the committee, industrious as they are, painstaking as we know them to be, devoting their time constantly to the public service, have investigated all of these chartered and unchartered gentlemen, because you will remember, Mr. Speaker, that they are not limited in the rights they are to have to the rights of benevolent institutions which are incorporated, but all the rights of benevolent institutions exercising rights of any character are to be invested in these gentlemen, and we are to give them authority in the most solemn way to exercise those rights.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, this is not wise legislation. It is ridiculous, it seems to me, that with all the grave questions pending before this House, questions of stateship, questions involving the highest rights of the people, which we are told we can not pass for want of time to properly consider them, one of the great committees of this House shall waste its time and the time of the House in the absurd performance of incorporating the Knights of Khorassan. Is it not strange that gentlemen will so forget the important duties with which they are intrusted? Here are my friend from California [Mr. KAHN] and my friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] forgetting that they are representing the political power of 50,000 of the sovereigns of the United States, forgetting that they are frittering away their time and the political power of those constituents in incorporating this Imperial Palace.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. HEPBURN. Just think of it, my friend here, Democrat that he is in the broadest sense, trying to perpetuate the Imperial Palace of the Dramatic Order, Knights of Khorassan. [Laughter.] I will yield to the gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman wherein this differs from the incorporation of the Knights Templars? I think the gentleman from Iowa was here at that time without protest.

Mr. HEPBURN. I confess that I do not know. I do not know anything more about the Knights of Khorassan than I do about the Veiled Prophet. It was his purpose in life to hide his identity and screen his personality to prevent mankind from knowing who he was, and, so far as I know, these gentlemen here devote themselves to seeking the same obscurity until they want to be incorporated.

Mr. GARRETT. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Do any of the fraternal and benevolent corporations of the District of Columbia exercise the power, or right, or privilege of paying insurance and dealing in insurance?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know; and that is one reason why I am not willing to vote for this bill. I notice that these gentlemen are given the privilege of changing at will their constitution, changing at will the purpose of their organization, perhaps, in that change of the constitution. If they should do that, what guarantee have we, if they are to have the same powers of all the other corporations named, that they may not blossom out into this kind of a corporation and conduct a charitable and benevolent business in insurance?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman from Iowa objects, as I understand, because it gives the order the power to change their constitution. Now, then, will the gentleman say that any person, other than a member of the organization, could possibly be affected by any change of the constitution?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is a question I can not answer. not know what the purpose of this organization is. I simply know that, in my judgment, they can gain every power they ought to have under the general incorporation law, and that they ought not to come here seeking the distinction of a special creation by the Congress of the United States. I want to call attention to another feature showing the migratory, evanescent, movable character of this body.

The general offices of said corporation shall be in the District of Columbia or in any State where the secretary of the incorporation may reside.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HEPBURN. For a question.
Mr. ASHBROOK. Does not the gentleman know that the officers are elected and liable to be in the State of Illinois one year, the State of Missouri the next year, or the State of Iowa the next, and that therefore it is necessary to change the offices?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think it is altogether likely, and if this body is of such importance as to entitle it to recognition by this Congress, it is of such importance that it should have a permanent habitation and not exist in the town where the hat of its secretary may be. I want these gentlemen to have every right that is necessary. Let them go to the incorporation laws of this District and let them conduct that business as they may be authorized under it. I am told that the reason why they are unwilling to do that is because they do not expect to have a local habitation. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD SUBSTATION.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26920.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26920) to repeal section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1903, and to provide for the location and erection of a substation on the parking at the corner formed by the intersection of the east side of Seventh street and the south side of C street SW., in the city of Washington, D. C., by the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, and to provide for the approval of the same by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would like some explanation of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN].

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to settle the controversy which has been going on for several years between the District Commissioners and the railroad company in reference to a location for the substation in south Washington. The act which passed Congress in 1903 provided for the erection of a union station, and also provided for the erection of a substation north of the Long Bridge, in the following language:

SEC. 12. The Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company shall establish and maintain a substation, with suitable accommodations for passenger traffic, at a convenient location north of Long Bridge, and at a point to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

That act also provided that the station should be completed in five years from the passage of the act. The five years had expired and nothing had been done toward the construction of the substation, although the Union Station had been practically completed.

The District Commissioners had approved, in the interim, a site at Fourteenth street for the substation, just north of the Long Bridge. It was subsequently discovered by them that the site was not convenient or suitable for the place, and they undertook to withdraw their approval, and did so far as they could withdraw their approval of that site, and approved of the site at Seventh street, the one provided for in the present bill.

The railroad authorities appealed to the court, and the court held that, as the commissioners had only the right of approval under the first act of 1903, and having exercised that right, they could not withdraw it, and it would have to stand, as approved, at Fourteenth street; and so we found ourselves in that condition, without any substation and without any real right to erect a substation at Fourteenth street, because a part of the property which had been approved was government property, and the rail-roads could not acquire and did not acquire title to it.

And so the controversy continued, the people in the meantime demanding that the substation should be erected. Six hundred commuters from one railroad in Virginia come into the town every day, and this substation is the station which they would use. Three or four hundred from another railroad come in, and they were required to go all the way over to the Union Station, which is a great hardship.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Would any of these commuters use the substation if it was fixed at Fourteenth street at the end of the Long Bridge, or would they not all come to the Union Station anyway?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. So that that place would mean no substation at all.

Mr. CARLIN. Would mean no substation at all. The substation has been partially fixed at Fourteenth street by way of They do stop the trains there now, and there is a platform, but in the nighttime it is dark and lonely, and one's life is in danger to wait in that section of the town for a train, or to get off there in the nighttime from the incoming train is to encounter the same danger. In addition to that, there is only one street railway leading from that station, which runs its cars at intervals of twenty minutes, the Mount Vernon Railroad Company, and one is required to pay a separate fare to the Avenue and another fare after you reach the Avenue.

In other words, a round trip to the Fourteenth street station costs the commuter daily 20 cents, while at Seventh street it would cost 10 cents, because the Seventh street cars transfer to any part of the city. Briefly speaking, an agreement has been reached by the junior Senator from Virginia, by myself, who have been agitating the matter, and the patron of the bill which was pending, the District Commissioners and the railroad authorities agreeing that finally Seventh street should be selected as the final site for the substation. In order to accomplish that the legislation proposed here is necessary. There are two amendments which I will explain to the House, one of which is to cure an omission in the bill and the other is to meet a suggestion of the commissioners.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I suggest to the gentleman that he might let the Clerk read those amendments at this time.

Mr. CARLIN. Very well. I will ask the Clerk to do that now, and I will explain them as I have explained the bill. Briefly speaking, that is the situation and the necessity for this station. The people who come into the city from the south and leave the city for the south are demanding a substation. Congress has enacted a law, and that law has been in existence for over five years, requiring its erection. Not a pick has been struck, and nothing has been done toward the construction of the station. The dying hours of the session are upon us, and I hope now that since we are finally agreed upon a situation in such a location as would be suitable to the people, this bill will pass.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Who pays for the station?

Mr. CARLIN. The railroad company. I will ask the Clerk to report the amendments which I send to the desk, The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after section 3, on page 2, section 3B, to read as follows:

"SEC. 3 B. Section 12 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved February 28, 1903, is hereby repealed."

Amend by adding, on page 2, line 2, after the word "southwest," the words "and south of the south building line of C street."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company shall, within thirty days from the enactment hereof, begin and within four months complete the construction of a substation, with suitable accommodation for passenger travel, on the parking at the corner formed by the intersection of the east side of Seventh street and the south side of C street SW., in the city of Washington, D. C., and to occupy as licensees, for the purpose of the construction, maintenance, and operation of said substation, the parking appurtenant to the square known as square south of square 463 on the map of the city of Washington.

Sec. 2. That the plans for said substation shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the same creeted under their supervision.

Sec. 3. That there shall always be maintained at said substation a ticket office and agent for the sale of tickets and accommodation for baggage.

baggage.

SEC. 4. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. MANN. Is this station to be located in any way on any government land?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; part of it is.

Mr. MANN. On a part of what is now a park?

Mr. CARLIN. No; on a piece of waste land there that ad-joins the property of the railroad company, in a triangle.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by waste land? Mr. CARLIN. I mean by that a piece of land which is not being used and can not be used for any other purpose. I have a map here showing the plans.

Mr. MANN. Well, considering the small little triangular parks they have in the city, it would be very interesting to see so small a piece that could not be used for any such purpose.

Mr. CARLIN. It includes only about 7,000 feet of land. The station is to be 27 by 60 feet.

Mr. MANN. How much of the government land is included?
Mr. CARLIN. About 7,000 feet.
Mr. MANN. Well, that is a pretty good sized piece of ground—that is 70 by 100 feet.
Mr. CARLIN. This is just a little corner off the square which the railroad company already owns. It is across the street from the main park. There was an objection by the citizens of southwest Washington to any use of the park, and this is on the opposite side of the street.

Mr. MANN. How does the Government happen to own that piece of land?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not know. The title happens to have been in the Government for many, many years, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. And never has been used for any purpose?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly not, as far as I know.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The Government has owned it, I think, since 1802.

Mr. CARLIN. It is a little spot that has not been able to render any service to anybody until now. I would very much prefer, of course, that we did not have to donate this land, but it is a great public convenience, and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company would be uncomfortable if it were not on government ground, and I do not want them to be uncomfortable.

Mr. MANN. I know, but I am not half as worried about whether the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will be uncomfortable as the gentleman is. They have been on public land for a long time, and how long nobody

Mr. CARLIN. I will state to the gentleman that this bill provides that they can be licensees, and we can move them off any time we want to.

Mr. MANN. They were licensees at the old station, but when we moved them off it cost-how much? A million and a half dollars?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not know; but I tried to prevent the payment of it.

Mr. MANN. In the other case we could move them off whenever we liked, but it was at the expense of a million and a half

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. May I ask the gentleman a question? What is the value of this land?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not know. I do not think it is very valuable land; it is in southwest Washington.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Why should not the railroad company pay for it?

Mr. CARLIN. We do not give them a title to the land; we only give them the right under this bill as licensees. It is not even perpetual, so that they can be moved at any hour or day it is desired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It would accommodate the people a great deal better to have the substation than to leave an unsightly piece of ground in an unimproved condition or merely to make a park of it in that part of the city; and I know, from my conversations with many of the people who have business in that section, that they are practically unanimously in favor of this.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. If the railroad company pay for the land, we could use that land and go ahead and have the benefit of the depot, too.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If you can assure the erection of the

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If you can assure the erection of the substation and make them pay, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman from Virginia offer an amendment?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; two amendments. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after section 3, on page 2, section 3 B, to read as follows:

"Sec. 3 B. Section 12 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for a union railway station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved February 2S, 1903, is hereby repealed."

Amend by adding, on page 2, line 2, after the word "southwest," the words "and south of the south building line of C street."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AND PLAN OF GOVERNMENT PROPOSED FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BY A CONVENTION COMPOSED OF DELEGATES FROM 14 CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS, HELD AT THE RIGGS HOUSE, IN WASHINGTON, D. C., ON SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 19, 1908.

JANUARY 23, 1909.

JANUARY 23, 1909.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Sixtieth Congress of the United States:

Whereas it is declared in the Declaration of Independence that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; and

Whereas our Revolutionary forefathers rightly contended that "taxation without representation is tyranny;" and

Whereas it was truthfully stated by Abraham Lincoln from the steps of the Executive Mansion during the civil war that "we can not have free government without elections;" and

Whereas it is conceded that "in form the present government of the District of Columbia is an absolute autocracy, not legally responsible to the people;" and

Whereas such a form of government is undemocratic, unrepublican, un-American, and contrary to the fundamental principles in defense of

District of Columbia is an absolute autocracy, not legally responsible to the people;" and

Whereas such a form of government is undemocratic, unrepublican, un-American, and contrary to the fundamental principles in defense of which our brave and liberty-loving ancestors pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor: Therefore

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that Congress should speedily reestablish a republican form of government in the capital of the Republic, the political heart of the Nation—a government of the people, by the people, and for the people—and respectfully submit the following plan as best suited, in our opinion, to the needs and desires of a majority of the legal residents of the District of Columbia, to wit:

1. In place of three commissioners there shall be a governor, who shall have been a resident of the District of Columbia for not less than four years prior to his election to such office by the qualified voters of said District.

2. There shall be elected by the people five commissioners who shall have resided in the District for not less than three years prior to election to such office, and the President of the United States be authorized to appoint five commissioners, other than those elected by the people, to represent the people of the United States on said board of commissioners; and that the five elected by the people shall be selected forming the different sections of the District.

3. The term of office of the governor and commissioners shall be three years.

4. The governor shall exercise all the executive powers and authority.

4. The governor shall exercise all the executive powers and authority now vested by law in the three commissioners and such other authority as Congress may delegate to him. He shall have a vote in case of a tie in the Board of Commissioners. The Board of Commissioners shall have all the legislative power and authority now exercised by the Board of Commissioners and such other legislative authority as Congress may delegate.

5. Inasmuch as the District of Columbia contributes more in taxes in the support of the General Government than a number of the States of the Union, there shall be a delegate in the House of Representatives, who shall have been a resident of the District not less than five years prior to his election to said office.

6. No male person shall be a qualified voter in the District of Columbia who is not 21 years of age, and shall have resided in the said District for not less than one year and in the ward or election district not less than unree months prior to the day of election. He shall be able to read and write the English language, or shall have paid taxes on not less than $500$ assessed real or personal property not less than thirty days prior to election day. No person who is a qualified voter in any of the States shall be a voter in the District of Columbia.

7. That all elections in the District shall be held under the secretballot system and stringent registration and election laws, with severe penalties for fraudulent registration or voting.

The following committee have been instructed by the citizens' associtions aforesaid to present to the Congress the above resolutions as a memorial for the enactment of a law authorizing the proposed plan.

Respectfully submitted.

REFUND OF STAMP TAXES.

The bill has just been reported unanimously from the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I merely want to ask a question of the Senator from Maryland. The bill covers all the anthracite-coal claims at all the ports?
Mr. RAYNER. I think so.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is general, and covers all claims and all ports

Mr. RAYNER. I can not answer that it covers all claims: but it covers all that have been, I think, presented to the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I mean it is not confined to entries at a single port?

Mr. RAYNER. It is not confined to any port, I understand. It is for the refund of a tax that has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The Senator will recollect that the Supreme Court held that the tax was unconstitutional.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

Newell of a certain judgment in favor of the United States, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 851) thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTRICTION ON OPIUM TRADE.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8021) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes, which was reported this morning by the Committee on Finance. The international congress is now meeting at Shanghai, and it is very important that the bill should be promptly passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. IS

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the bill comes from a committee of which I have the honor to be a member, and while I thoroughly sympathize with the object of it, I have grave doubt that it is exactly the kind of legislation Congress is competent to enact. It is upon its face an effort to suppress the practice of smoking opium and that is clearly a police regulation. There is, however, a line of argument upon which the bill can probably be defended, and that is upon the ground that in the regulation of commerce we have a right to admit an article which is in a merchantable condition and we have a right to exclude an article which we do not consider a merchantable one.

My opinion, however, is that the purpose of the measure is to attempt by the Federal Government through the custom-houses to regulate and suppress a bad habit among the people. I am not going to object to the unanimous consent which has been requested, and it is probably true that if I had further time to examine it I might not object to the bill. As the matter stands, however, I think it so doubtful that while I will make no objection to its present consideration I intend to vote "no," so as to be on the safe side.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the Senator's position to be that if in the judgment of Congress an article is merchantable, then it would be unconstitutional to exclude it from interstate commerce; but if in the judgment of Congress it is not merchantable, then it would be constitutional to exclude it from commerce. Is that correct?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that seems to be the only way to reconcile the practice of the Government and some of the decisions of the courts. Clearly, the Federal Government has no general police powers, although if we are to proceed much further along the line suggested by some Senators, in the way of a child-labor law and other enactments of that kind, we must finally reach a point when we assert and probably establish a general police power in the Federal Government.

I never have voted for a bill which seemed to me to recognize the existence of such a power in the General Government, and while I do not say that this bill can not be defended without assuming or asserting that power, I think it is at least doubtful, and I am going to solve the doubt on the safe side.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me point out to the Senator where the logic of his first statement leads him. If, in the judgment of Congress, an article to-day is not merchantable we might constitutionally exclude it from interstate commerce; but, if to-morrow, on learning more about the article we thought it is merchantable, then we could not constitutionally exclude it from interstate commerce. In other words, reduced to its last analysis, whether it is constitutional for us to exclude an article from interstate commerce depends entirely upon our opinion of the article at different times and not of the Constitution.

Mr. BAILEY. The Constitution has to be applied and Senators are assumed to have sense enough to know how to apply it. An article which to-day might be deemed deleterious and unmerchantable might, by the progress of science and inven-tion, be demonstrated next year to be useful for many purposes. I want to say this, and I think I have said it before on the floor of the Senate, that except for the decision in the lottery case I would deny that the right to regulate commerce included the power to deny the right to engage in commerce where the commerce was with respect to a merchantable article.

Now, the other view is-and I think it is entirely tenable and sound-that, in pursuance of the power to regulate commerce, Congress can say that a given article because of its character might interfere with the commerce of the country and may be constitutionally excluded. For illustration, Congress can exclude diseased meat from state and foreign commerce because the diseased meat is undoubtedly a serious interference in the commerce of merchantable meat. Upon that theory I concede that Congress has ample power to protect commerce in merchantable articles and to exclude from the channels of commerce an article not merchantable or an article that would taint those articles that are merchantable. I believe that is generally recognized as true.

Mr. BEVERIDGE rose.

Mr. BAILEY. Permit me to say here and now—of course I understand what the Senator from Indiana has in his mind—
Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the Senator must not attribute to me anything I have in mind. The Senator has laid down a very broad principle of legislative action; and I thought it was so well laid down that it was worth while to have the Senator repeat it by having his attention called to it.

For example, if the Senator will permit me, the Senator said in his last remarks that the progress of science in a year might show that a certain article could or could not be excluded from interstate commerce under our constitutional power. Time might demonstrate that we might do this year precisely the reverse of what we did last year, and our action both times be equally constitutional. So, then, reduced to its last analysis the Senator's position is, that the progress of science or any other cause may so influence our judgment on an article as to make a certain act upon our part constitutional, which, with less scientific or other knowledge of the article, would be unconstitutional.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I not only subscribe to that doc-trine, but I think that a given act passed for a given purpose might be entirely constitutional when the same act passed for a different purpose might be entirely unconstitutional. illustration which is found in the law books comes to the mind of every Senator. While it has been sometimes said to be a dictum and not a question decided in that case, yet it announced such a wholesome governmental principle that it has been universally accepted. It is that a law levying a tax for supporting the Government would be constitutional while precisely the same law, levying the same rate of taxation, the proceeds to be applied not to support the Government but to the benefit of an individual, would be robbery, if I might borrow the famous expression of Judge Miller, none the less though done under the form of law.

Another case arises in my mind. Suppose Congress believed that clothing made in a certain way was unwholesome, and that it was calculated to communicate disease; that it was calculated to and would therefore injuriously affect commerce in clothing. Congress might have under the rule the power to exclude that clothing from interstate and foreign commerce. But if, instead of wanting to protect commerce, Congress wanted to protect the children who made those clothes, and sought not to protect the commerce, but to protect the health, the morals, or the strength of children, then Congress would have no power to pass that identical law for that purpose, because the preservation and protection of the health and morals and strength of children is a matter resting with the State and not with the Federal Government.

Will the Senator permit me? Mr. BEVERIDGE.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator cited the most conspicuous illustration in the lottery case. That law was passed for the avowed purpose of the preservation of morals. Congress there's asserted and the Supreme Court upheld our power to do a thing which up to that moment had been considered exclusively the province of the State-to protect the morals of its citizens.

The protection of morals was one of the reasons given for ne decision. Yet I believe that in the decision itself it was the decision. pointed out that lotteries had not theretofore in the history of this country been regarded with disfavor. So, thirty years before the lottery law was passed and this decision was rendered it would not have been constitutional to exclude lottery tickets from interstate commerce; but by reason of the change in the public sentiment as to the effect of lottery tickets upon the morals, it did, in the judgment of the Supreme Court, become constitutional to exclude lottery tickets.

Mr. BAILEY. I think if the Senator from Indiana will examine the lottery case he will find that the court did not predicate their decision in that case upon the question of morals. They finally said that a lottery ticket was a subject of commerce, and as a subject of commerce was subject to regulation by Congress.

However, I think, with all deference to the Supreme Court, that the lottery case is not entitled to very high consideration. That decision was made by a vote of 5 to 4. The law was of such doubtful constitutionality that it was argued and reargued the third time and a decision on it deferred for months. Evidently some one member of the court concurred very reluctantly in the decision. I have not examined it for some time, but as I recall that case it was argued on three different occasions. I think there was the original argument and then another and then a third argument. I am almost certain that is true. Finally the court decided by a vote of 5 to 4, and it seems that the only way they could obtain the fifth vote was by agreeing to incorporate in the decision a statement that they meant to decide no more in this case than, and so forth.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. I wish to say that in making this statement, of course, I do not make it as a matter within my knowledge, and I only infer that this was the condition of the court by the circumstances surrounding the decision.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator criticise the decision of the Supreme Court upon the ground that only a majority joined in the prevailing decision? If he does, I ask him whether he applies that to every case that has been decided by a vote of to 4?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not criticise the decision, but undoubtedly the authority of any decision which is made by a vote of 5 to 4 can not be very great, because I have seen the time I would rather have the opinion of the four judges who dissented, without making any invidious distinctions, than to have the opinion of the five judges who concurred.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course-when we agree with the minority opinion, or rather, when the minority agrees with our opinion.

Mr. BAILEY. Although it is not germane right here, I think there is no more unfortunate practice in this country than that of dissenting opinions in the Supreme Court. For the last ten or fifteen years we have accustomed ourselves in almost every great opinion to expect the decision of that court to be rendered by a vote of 5 to 4. That line of division has run through practically every important case in the last fifteen years, and it is a matter of sincere regret to me that the court can not reach a conclusion and announce it without the necessity of these dissenting opinions.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very glad, Mr. President, that the Senator has uttered the last sentence he did, that this had run practically through every decision—hardly that, but it has run through many decisions in the last fifteen years—because I was going to call the Senator's attention to the peril that he or we or anybody else runs in questioning the law as laid down by the Supreme Court by a majority opinion. It is not only true in the lottery case, but within the last four or five years in many very important cases. The Senator cited the history of the lottery case with substantial correctness, I think, but he might have found an even more important illustration in the legal-tender cases, where there was reversal by the Supreme Court of its first decision, and by only a majority vote; yet neither the Senator nor anybody else would now question that the final opinion in the legal-tender case is the law of the land. We can not weaken the law of the land by saying: "Oh, well, it was sustained by a vote of only 5 to 4.

Mr. BAILEY. I greatly regret that was not accepted as true with respect to the tax on incomes. The law as it now stands, of course, binds the citizen; and yet the last decision on the income tax reversed the uniform and unbroken decisions from the foundation of the Government. As to the decision of the legal-tender case, I have no doubt in my mind that the original decision was the correct interpretation of the Constitution, but I accept the later decision, because for more than thirty years it has been followed by the court, acquiesced in by the legislative and executive departments of the Government, and accepted by all the people.

I am aware that acquiescence can not change the meaning of a written instrument, but I am also aware that we follow a safe rule laid down in the early days of the Republic that a given construction of the Constitution, whether rendered originally by the court or not, acquiesced in and acted upon by the various departments of the Government, and by the people at large, must finally be binding upon the conscience and the judgment of legislators and of judges.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Mr. MONEY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts. Mr. LODGE. I only wish to say a word in regard to the bill. It, so far as I understand it, has no relation to interstate commerce at all. It is a tariff prohibition against the introduction of opium-opium prepared for smoking purposes. It admits all opium and its derivatives for medicinal purposes, but excludes smoking opium. Such prohibitions in the tariff, I think, have existed from the beginning of the Government; for instance, the prohibition of the introduction of obscene books. do not care, however, to go into that question, but merely state to the Senate why I press for action on the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me a moment, then I will yield.

There is a meeting of an international commission in regard to this subject now in progress at Shanghai. We have American commissioners there. I think I am correct in saying that every important nation, except the United States, has adopted legislation of the character of this bill as a measure of hygiene and protection.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the point.

That, of course, is the real reason. Mr. LODGE. Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. President, if it is a matter of health, it is not within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and I must object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I was speaking of the views of other nations. Mr. BAILEY. But I understood the Senator to say—

Mr. LODGE. They think it is good to exclude the smoking of opium.

Mr. BAILEY. I think almost every State—
Mr. LODGE. And I presume they have not supposed that would stand in the way.

Mr. BAILEY. I think probably every State in the Union has a law forbidding the smoking of opium. If they have not, I am sure they ought to have.

Mr. LODGE. This, as I understand, stands on the same ground as the prohibition of the introduction of obscene publications, which has been in the tariff for years. I will not attempt to explain it, but it has been there; and there is also a prohibition against the introduction of certain kinds of instruments. Various prohibitions of importation have been in every tariff law from the beginning. I do not want to go into a discussion of the justice of those prohibitions, but I wish to read a letter which I have just received from the Secretary of State. It reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 25, 1909.

The Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, United States Senate.

Sin: I have the honor to quote herewith, for your information, the following telegram just received from the chairman of the American Opium Commission at Shanghai:
"American commissioners assembled. Work well in hand, and organized on economical basis. Prospects favorable. Passage of opium bill before February 1 of the utmost importance."

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

E. Root.

The department is extremely anxious that this legislation shall passed as soon as possible. That was my reason for asking for be passed as soon as possible. unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill this morning.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I simply want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the fact that this is a part of tariff legislation could not alter the power of the Federal Governmen with respect to it; in other words, if it is a question that the Federal Government has the power to deal with, it may deal with it in the way of a tax or in the way of regulation; but the Government has no right to regulate through a tax a matter which it has no right to regulate directly. To levy a tax for the purpose of regulation under the guise of a revenue power is simply to abuse the taxing power of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts convinces me that I am right in protesting against this bill. The nations of the world, which have no government like ours—no divisions and subdivisions which must be respected—have called a conference, and they want to regulate the health and morals of their people. They deal in the main directly with the citizens, whose health and morals are subject to the control of the governments whose representatives are meeting as the Senator from Massachusetts has described. overlook-the Senator from Massachusetts does not overlook, because he understands it perfectly well-that in this Government of ours we have divisions and departments, and that matters relating to the health and morals of the community are committed exclusively to the States, and in no wise are subject to the control of the Federal Government. Therefore, if it is a matter of health and morals that these nations are trying to improve and protect, they have found the wrong way to do it, so far as this Government is concerned, and I believe that the whole purpose of this bill is to affect, through a federal agency, a matter of health and morals. Still, I am not so sure about it as to object to consideration; I will vote against it with every confidence that I am voting right.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my only proposition is that the National Government has the sole right to impose duties on imports-to prohibit, to exclude, or to admit.

Mr. BAILEY. It has that right for certain purposes: it can levy a tax to raise revenue or to regulate commerce; but it has no right to levy a tax for the purpose of regulating our health or our morals.

Mr. LODGE. I am very willing, Mr. President, to put this measure on the ground of the regulation of commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [A pause.] The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not rise to especially oppose this bill, but to call attention to one or two features of it.

I have had frequent occasion to come in contact with those who produce opium, and I would suggest that as a prohibition against the importing of opium this bill should be amended. The bulb of the poppy plant which produces opium is not opium, nor is there anything in that bulb that afterwards becomes

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I had supposed, Mr. President, that this bill originated where the Constitution requires revenue bills to originate-in the House of Representatives-but this bill seems to have originated in the Senate, and obviously it is not a revenue bill, or it could not have originated here.

Mr. HEYBURN. I shall not consider the bill from the standpoint of a revenue bill, but from the standpoint of its sufficiency to prevent the importation of opium. I take it that every man who has the interest of the people at heart is opposed to the importation of opium for smoking purposes. This bill should be amended so as to cover the raw material from which opium is made, and which is not opium, and would not come within the prohibition of this bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. I'do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I rise to inquire if unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. LODGE. It has been given. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent has been given. Mr. HEYBURN. Unanimous consent has been given, otherwise I should not have spoken.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is before the Senate. Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

The bill, I repeat, is before the Senate. Mr. LODGE. Mr. FULTON. It is yet subject, however, to objection. Mr. LODGE. I think not, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President. I understood the Chair to ask for objection, to pause, and to say, "No objection being made, the bill is now before the Senate."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair paused for objection, and no objection being made, the Chair announced that no objection was made, and that the bill was before the Senate as in

Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Chair if the bill is not still open to objection to its consideration any time before it is passed? it is not, then I make the point of order that in the consideration of measures in the morning hour no Senator can occupy more than five minutes in discussing a measure. I ordinarily would not make the point of order, but there is business that is waiting here that ought not to be delayed by such discussions as this.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am perfectly aware of the rule to which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] refers, and I shall not transgress it. I took the floor, as unanimous consent had been given, to call attention to the fact that this bill should include the poppy bulbs; "poppy heads," as they are called, because it is from those heads that opium is made. It is through the means of the importation of those heads that most of the opium comes. The Senator in charge of the bill, I think, will realize the necessity for that, and in line 4 or 5, of section 1, will insert the words "poppy heads."

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the word "opium" has been used in the statutes from the beginning, and its meaning is clearly understood. If the Senator will read the section in the present law, he will find that the word "opium" has always

Mr. HEYBURN. There is the reason, Mr. President, that poppy growing in this country is assuming such large importance. know of one man who raised 1,200 pounds of poppy seed for planting next year.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that he accept the amendment,

Mr. HEYBURN. It so happens that this is in the part of the country in which I live, and so I have occasion to know something about it. So you will not succeed in stopping the opium trade under the provisions of this bill to the extent that you hope to do, because they are bringing these poppy heads into the country and making the opium here; and they are not within the language of the prohibition.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. I am a member of the committee that reported this measure, and it was reported with my approval. I would dislike very much for the Senate to vote for this measure or against it-I am not opposing it by the by—with any idea that any Supreme Court decision whatever, whether that decision be on the part of a mere majority of the court or a unanimous decision, should have any controlling influence upon the mind of any man sitting here in doing what he conceives to be his duty under his oath toward the country in the enactment of legislation.

The Supreme Court undertakes to expound in their relation to the Constitution the laws that are passed. It decides whether or not they are constitutional, not whether they are wise; and while any decision of any great court will always have a persuasive power upon the mind of any man sitting here or elsewhere, and while we as citizens are just as much bound as any other persons to recognize the force and validity of the decisions of the Supreme Court, yet they are not to be considered as guiding or directing us when we make up our minds how we shall vote upon any measure whatever.

I think the lottery case was not clearly understood. In the first place, it was argued that we could deny the lottery company the use of the mails, not that the United States had any power to control lotteries, but that the lottery should not have the power to use the United States as an instrumentality for conducting its business; that is, that the United States should not be compelled to carry in its mails at public expense what was considered a nefarious business. That was the first argument.

The second argument was that, under its power to regulate interstate commerce, the Federal Government could declare a lottery ticket transported from State to State an article of interstate commerce and forbid its entering into such commerce. That was the reason upon which that decision was based; and, as was stated by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], it was by a divided court, after as many as three or four hearings.

It is a question of morality, that can be determined almost according to the weather. In weather like that which we have recently had, if a man was of a pessimistic nature, he might retire to his chamber and there turn on the gas or blow his brains out. In good weather he does not do anything of the If he has a lottery ticket in his pocket, he will never blow out his brains, because he wants to see what is going to turn out when the drawing comes.

The time has been in this country when it was considered not at all immoral to draw lotteries. The Congress of the United States gave Thomas Jefferson the right by a law which it passed to recoup his broken fortune by drawing a lottery, which he never did. I have had in my possession tickets of the Alexandria lottery at the time George Washington was superintendent and director of that lottery. I recollect the legislature of Kentucky gave to five trustees of the Lutheran Church at Frankfort the right to draw a lottery to build a church. They did draw the lottery and did build the church, and it stands to-day as a place of worship. I recollect that more recently they gave certain gentlemen in the city of Louisville the right to draw a lottery to build a great public library in Louisville.

But the morals of the times have changed. One of the greatest of the German poets, Heine, says that morals are the customs of the country, and, except in some radical sense, that is true. Of course there are morals that run upon principle that can not be upset by custom or anything else; but, in the main, morals are now the customs of the country. One of the greatest masters of the English language said once that taste was morality; that it was not a mere indication or evidence of morality, but taste was morality itself, and if you would tell him what a person's taste was he would tell you exactly what his morals were.

Now, as to this bill, I myself think that there is no police power in the General Government of any character whatever. There can not be, from the very nature of the case. It is one of that vast mass of residuary powers left by the Constitution inherent, inalienable in the States themselves, and it has been so held in every decision of the Supreme Court that I have ever read. That is still true; but we travel, in this bill, upon extremely narrow lines, which I hold, however, to be sufficient. We can declare what is not merchantable and what is merchantable; and, under the power to regulate commerce, we can say what can be imported and what can not be imported. We could absolutely forbid some sorts of commerce from entering this country at all; and in this case, in my opinion, we clearly have the right, although on a very narrow line, I must say, to take the action proposed by the bill. Whatever the ulterior object may be, the object on the surface is the one that we will consider, and that is, to forbid the importation into this country of an article which is not merchantable according to our way of thinking. I think that is quite sufficient, and I hope that this bill will pass without any further delay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 1, page 1, line 9, after the words "Secretary of," it is proposed to strike out "Agriculture" and insert "the Treasury;" and in line 10, after the words "authorized to," to strike out "establish" and insert "prescribe;" so as to make the section read:

That after the 1st day of April, 1909, it shall be unlawful to import into the United States opium in any form or any preparation or derivative thereof: Provided, That opium and preparations and derivatives thereof, other than smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, may be imported for medicinal purposes only, under regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prescribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Cleveland and Mary Lord Harrison, to report it without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 852) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will go to the calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan reports certain hearings held before a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance, and asks that they be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 683), and that 500 additional copies be printed for Without objection, it is the use of the Committee on Finance. so ordered.

SUPPRESSION OF DEALINGS IN FUTURES.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 7370 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Arkansas the Chair lays before the Senate the bill indicated by him, which will be read by title.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7370) to prohibit any person or corporation, for themselves or for or in the interest of any other person or corporation, directly or indirectly, from delivering, receiving, or transmitting, and from being interested in, or aiding in any manner, the receiving, delivering, or transmitting by mail, telegraph, telephone, or other means whatever, in any State, district, country, Territory, or place over which the sovereignty of the United States of America now exists, any message, information, intelligence, letter, writing, card, device, sign, symbol, cipher, or other thing whatsoever, the subject of the senses, or any of them, whereby intelligence or information may be conveyed or understood, relating to or in any manner or form concerning any transaction or proposed or suggested transaction, scheme, or plan to speculate or gamble, or gain or lose sums of money called margins, which gains or losses, respectively, are made to depend upon the future increase or decrease of the market price of any product of the soil, provided that at the time of such transaction, proposed transaction, scheme, or plan for so speculating or gambling any such product of the soil be the subject of interstate commerce, or the subject of commerce from or by and between the people of the United States of America and the people of any foreign country.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the bill which I present for the consideration of this honorable body is leveled at one of the greatest evils that exists in this Government, namely, gambling in the products of the soil; gambling in the fruits of human industry, the fruits of honest toil. The object and purpose of this bill is to suppress this character of gambling, and I feel secure, sir, in the position I take, that if this bill shall receive the favorable consideration of Congress and shall become a law, it will accomplish the purpose for which it is intended and eradicate and destroy this great evil.

The provisions of the bill, to my mind, are plain, simple, yet fective. Section 1 of the bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, association of persons, corporation, or associa-tion of corporations, being in any State or Territory in the United States or any foreign country, to deliver, receive, or transmit, directly or indirectly, or to be interested in or to aid in the receipt, delivery, or transmission, by means of the mail, telegraph, or telephone, any intelligence or information, message, letter, or card, or other device whereby any intelligence or information may be conveyed to any other parties, persons, or associations, or corporations, for their use and benefit, relating to or in any way concerning any transaction suggested or proposed, whose true intent may be to gamble or speculate as to the future market price of any product of the soil, commonly known as "buying and selling futures," provided, that bona fide sales and delivery, according to contract, shall not subject the parties to such transactions to the penalties of this act.

Mr. President, this section, when boiled down to its last analysis and relieved of its legal technical verbiage, provides this: That in any interstate or international transaction it shall be unlawful to use the mails, or the telegraph, or the telephone system for the purpose of conveying gambling propositions between buyer and seller.

That this may be done can not be disputed by anyone who has given the subject careful consideration. For the present purpose of the argument, let us concede that buying and selling futures, as commonly understood among men, is a gambling transaction; then, I take it, sir, that it will not be gainsaid or denied that Congress, by proper bill, may provide that the public mails may not be used for the purpose of assisting, aiding, or encouraging such a gambling transaction. In like manner, Congress may say that the telegraph system and the telephone system of the country shall not be used for the purpose of conveying intelligence from buyer to seller, or vice versa, in any transaction of this character. These, Mr. President—the mail, the telegraph, and the telephone-are the three great means of communication, and if Congress shall, by law, place an inhibition upon their use for this purpose, the day of the speculator in the products of the soil will have ended, and the business of the cotton and other exchanges of the country will have ceased. Whenever we, by means of legislation, stop the means of communication between the buyer and the seller, this business of the gambler falls of its own weight, because when the feeders, through the instrumentality of the mail, the telegraph, and the telephone, are shut off, the gamblers at the fountain head of this nefarious scheme can not gamble among themselves, and their business is at once at an end.

Section 1 of this bill, Mr. President, provides a penalty not only against the telegraph and telephone companies who receive and transmit these messages, but it provides a penalty against the man who sends the message; also against the man who receives the message. It so hedges in this illegal transaction and makes the continuation of it so hazardous and uncerthat few will care to risk being caught in the meshes of the law in order to carry on this character of enterprise. Section 3 of the bill provides that it shall be unlawful for the postal authorities of the United States to receive for transmission, whether properly stamped or not, any letter or other thing mentioned in section 1 of this act; and if such unlawful letter or card shall at any time come into the custody of any postal official, it shall be marked "unlawful," filed in a place securely locked under the supervision of the proper postmaster or postal official, and notice of its possession given at once to the district attorney in the district in which it is taken, or to the Attorney-General, and the Postmaster-General shall make and publish proper rules and regulations for carrying into effect this provision.

Section 4 provides that if any officer of the Postal Department having the lawful possession of any such letter or other thing mentioned in sections 1 and 3 of this act, and shall, knowing the unlawful character of said letter, deliver the same, either to whom addressed or to any other person, except as provided in section 3, to the district attorney or Attorney-General, shall be subject to indictment, and, upon conviction, shall be fined in any sum not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and shall be removed from office and thereafter shall not be eligible to hold any office of public trust.

Section 5 of this act provides that any other person, other than postal officials, who shall violate this act shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be confined to the penitentiary for not less than five nor more than fifteen years.

Section 6 of this act provides that any corporation violating the provisions of this act shall forfeit and pay to the United States of America for each unlawful act not less than $10,000 nor more than $100,000, to be recovered by proper suit, one-half to go to the informant and one-half to the Government. Besides, the district attorney or the Attorney-General shall be derelict in his duty, or shall neglect or refuse to enforce the provisions of this act, then section 6 empowers the President of the United States to appoint some suitable and proper person that will enforce it.

This act, Mr. President, brief as it is, plain and explicit as are its terms, in my judgment, is a thorough and a complete remedy for the evil at which it is directed.

Of course, it is not contended that Congress can regulate transactions happening or occurring wholly within any given State. It can only regulate such transactions as are interstate or international, and this is all that is intended or contemplated by the bill under consideration.

I had the honor, Mr. President, while governor of my State, to draft a bill along these lines, applying to gambling transactions occurring wholly within the State of Arkansas.

This bill, as drafted by me, was enacted into a law by the legislature of Arkansas, and can be seen by reference to the acts of Arkansas for the session of 1907, and is much more drastic in its terms than the bill now under consideration. provides a penalty against the use of the telegraph or telephone lines wholly within the State of Arkansas, for the purpose of conveying information between buyer and seller in one of these transactions. The Western Union Telegraph Company resisted the enforcement of this law in the United States district court in the city of Little Rock, Ark., and was defeated at every point, the court upholding the law absolutely as written, and so thorough was the construction given the statute in this case and so satisfactory the reasoning of the court that an appeal was not taken, and to-day there can be no buying and selling of futures in the State of Arkansas, and no bucket shops are permitted to carry on their crooked transactions.

Now, Mr. President, the only difference between the Arkansas statute and the bill under consideration is that, in the bill now presented, we prohibit the use of the mails for this unlawful purpose. This, of course, can not be done by state statute, and I appeal to Senators here to help me in the enactment of this law to suppress this great evil.

Dealing in futures, either in cotton or grain, is conducted through the agency of exchanges, the most notable of which is the New York Cotton Exchange, and to this I desire to direct your attention especially. The New York Cotton Exchange, as is well known to each Senator, is a corporation organized under the laws of that State; it is composed of less than 500 members, and the number can not be increased beyond that; the initiation fee is $10,000, and new members are elected by the old; no man can deal directly in cotton futures unless he is a member of this exchange.

It is not contended, Mr. President, that every sale of cotton made by the New York Cotton Exchange is a gambling transaction, but I desire to say that during the fight before the legislature of my State, for the passage of the Arkansas statute against this evil, I personally cross-examined, under oath, one of the brightest members of that exchange, and in his testimony before the committee having the matter in charge he admitted that 90 per cent of their dealings were purely speculative, and that to rob the New York Cotton Exchange of its speculative feature would be to destroy the business itself.

This bill is not directed against legitimate transactions, where the delivery is made, or can be made, but is only directed against that character of transactions where no delivery is ever contemplated, either by the buyer or the seller, and nothing is expected to be done in the way of the completion of the contract except to pay the margin or difference between the price at which the product is sold or bought and the price of the market at the time delivery is to be had; in other words, to pay the difference in the fluctuations of the market, which is purely speculative, and as sworn to by this member of the New York Cotton Exchange, 90 per cent of their transactions are of this character. As further proof upon this point, Mr. President, I submit an extract from a report of the Senate committee appointed by this honorable body to investigate and report upon this subject, such committee being presided over by that able jurist and statesman, the late Senator George, of Mississippi. This committee made a full examination of the entire option question, took the fullest testimony from the ablest representatives of the exchanges, and made a report, which, with the testimony, was printed as a public document, Senate Report 986, third session of the Fifty-third Congress. Here is what that Here is what that committee had to say as to the option system:

committee had to say as to the option system:

In the first place, let it be noted that only in and through and under the regulations of the two cotton exchanges in New York and New Orleans can this business be transacted. The cotton exchange in New York is a corporation under the laws of that State. It is composed of less than 500 members, and the number can not be increased beyond that. The initiation fee is $10,000, and the new members are elected by the old. No man can deal directly in futures unless he is a member. The corporation has absolute power over the dealings. All disputes or controversies are settled by a court established by the corporation itself, in what is called "arbitration proceedings." Neither party is allowed to call in a federal or state court. It fixes the grades of all cotton, designates the warehouses in which it shall be stored, fixes the fee, and charges for storage, weighing, and all other work done in relation to cotton. It fixes the quotation of prices which are to be published to the world, and these quotations are thus fixed under its rules for months for which there are no actual sales.

It and its members have such wealth that it is claimed, in a published letter of one of the principal members, made in response to argument made on the floor of this body, that the exchange can absolutely dominate and fix prices, as against all others, by flooding the market with offers of an unlimited supply of futures when at other places prices are, in its opinion, too high, and thus break the market; and, on the other hand, when it deems prices too low at other places, may immediately buy all that can be offered.

The New Orleans Cotton Exchange, though located in the largest cotton market this side of the Atlantic, is a mere annex to and a subordinate of the New York Cotton Exchange, and so need not be described further than by saying if it had the will to do good it has not the

Such are the agencies and localities of these dealings, and they are e sole agencies and places for transacting this business.

Mr. President, I select the one product, cotton, for the purpose of this argument, notwithstanding the bill here proposed forbids future dealing in any product of the soil. I select cotton because I hail from the Southland where cotton is king, is our staple commodity; where cotton is our all. God has blessed the Southland as he has no other portion of this great Commonwealth. He has given us in soil and climate a corner on the production of this great staple, and it is to prevent the gambler from despoiling our agricultural people, not only of the South but of the West as well, that I ask for the passage of this bill. If it be insisted that the New York Cotton Exchange is a legitimate business, and that it is not a gambling device and should not be disturbed by legislative enactment, I have but to call attention to the fact that the average yield of cotton for the past ten years has been about 11,000,000 bales. Ah, Mr. Presiden, how many bales of cotton have been sold by the thieves and gamblers in this New York Exchange? More than ten times the amount annually produced by the farmers of the Southland. More than 10 bales for 1. Then I ask the Senators upon this floor who would oppose the passage of this bill, How can delivery be made?

Do you not know, as a matter of fact, Mr. President, that delivery is never contemplated? Then, if this is true, this New York Cotton Exchange is one great, big gambling institution; and shall it be contended that simply because it is a gambling house upon a large scale, controlled by the wealthiest men in the land, that it shall go unwhipped of justice, that it shall go unpunished by law, when the small gambler that risks but little on the throw of the dice is punished by the laws of every State in the Union and would not be countenanced by any Senator upon this floor? With an average annual yield of 11,000,000 bales of cotton, this exchange has sold more than 100,000,000 bales annually, and I say to you, Mr. President, that this 11,000,000 bales actually produced, by no process of reasoning known to myself, can be rubberized so as to cover 100,000,000 bales of fictitious cotton sold by this crowd of gamblers; and it is well known to every dealer that a delivery is a physical impossibility, and no delivery is contemplated in the transaction. The whole transaction is a pure gamble, a bucket-shop transaction of the worst kind, and no exchange should be lawfully empowered to continue this gambling game.

If we needed further proof that the business of the New York Cotton Exchange is purely a gambling device, we have but to examine the case of Irwin against Miller, 110 United States, 499-507-508, where that court of last resort, the Supreme Court of the United States, sanctioned the charge of the trial judge to the jury, which was as follows:

If, however, at the time of entering into a contract for a sale of personal property for future delivery it be contemplated by both parties that at the time fixed for delivery the purchaser shall merely receive or pay the difference between the contract and the market price, the transaction is a wager, and nothing more. It makes no difference that a bet or wager is made to assume the form of a contract. Gambling is none the less such because it is carried on in the form or guise of legitimate

The Supreme Court of the United States said:

We accept this as a correct statement of the law upon that point.

It is estimated by the press of the country that the average daily sale of future cotton by the New York Cotton Exchange will equal a million bales per day, or 300,000,000 bales annually, or more than 30 times the entire actual product of the soil. While this estimate of the press may be excessive, yet it is in the neighborhood of correct, and shows conclusively that no de-livery is contemplated by the parties to the transaction, but that it is gambling pure and simple.

If additional proof were necessary, Mr. President, to establish the fact that this future dealing in cotton is but a gambling transaction, I may quote more liberally from the report of the Senate committee above referred to. This report is based upon the testimony of cotton experts, cotton growers, cotton merchants, and men schooled in every phase of cotton production in each of the ten States that grow cotton. This testimony is full and complete and covers more than 500 pages of printed matter in the Senate document to which I have referred. In the testimony taken before this committee it is contended by the advocates of future gambling that there is or can be an actual delivery in each of these future sales. The committee, however, says, after a careful analysis of this testimony:

However, says, after a carrein analysis of this testimony.

It is shown very conclusively that the actual deliveries, as they are claimed to be, are, in fact, fictitious. It is shown that a certain number of bales are classed, weighed, and certificated, and deposited in a warehouse. Each certificate is for 100 bales and is a legal tender for delivery under one of these contracts. It is negotiable and passes around from hand to hand, as other negotiable paper. It is tendered and accepted on an average at least 30 times before it rests. In this way it is claimed 3,000 bales are delivered to one certificate, yet, in all these various transactions, not a bale of cotton is seen or actually passes from one man to another.

The cotton all the time rests in the warehouse for delivery, it is true, to the holder of the certificate, but the holder is a mere gambler in futures and does not want the cotton any more than the purchaser under the futures contract wants it. So he does not call for the delivery, but makes it the basis of further dealings in futures. He makes other sales and, in compliance with these, delivers the same certificate; and it thus goes the active round of transfer and the negotiation till it settles another 3,000 bales or more, and so continues till the twelve months for which it runs has expired. Nor does this necessarily end it. It may be certificated again for another twelve months, and so on ad infinitum, or until, having performed its office in being the foundation for innumerable pseudo deliveries, it may be retired from active business by a real sale and delivery to the paper manufacturer or some other user of inferior cotton.

The ingenuity of these dealers thus, in the settlement as in the making of contracts, simulates real transactions so well as to give color to their claim that these dealings are not, as they are in law, pure gambling on the future price of cotton. In the contracts the stipulation to deliver is mere sham, never intended to be fulfilled, compliance being evaded by ring settlements and by the sham deliveries we have described, the certificates alluded to being less in real substance than the gambler's checks, which, as representatives of money, go through many transfers, according to the varying fortunes of the game, but are supposed to be redeemable in actual money at the end of the play.

I am willing to rest my case, Mr. President, upon this point in the controversy, on the findings of the Senate committee, which, in my judgment, shows conclusively that this buying and selling of cotton futures is gambling of the worst type. the worst type? Because it is gambling not only in the products of the soil, but it is gambling in the flesh, in the blood, and in the bones of the women and children of the South, who are forced by the robbery and spoliation of these gamblers to toil from daylight until dark to produce the subject-matter of this gambling transaction. It will be noted, Mr. President, that the bill under consideration does not make it a crime or attempt to punish these gambling transactions per se, for the reason that it would be difficult to locate the situs or body of the offense. It is a divided transaction, occurring partly in New York and partly in the State where the buyer may reside, and it would be difficult for the courts of the country to determine just where the jurisdiction rests that might punish this offense. But, sir, the bill under consideration seeks to destroy the means of communication between the gambler and his patron, to inflict such penalties for the use of the mail, the telegraph and telephone systems for this unlawful gambling transaction as that it may leave the gambler, the stockjobber, the perpetrator of this gambling device without a means of reaching his customer for the purpose of plying his wicked vocation. If this bill shall become a law, it will be easy to locate the jurisdiction that shall have power to punish the offenses, and I apprehend that but few that now fritter away their substance chasing this will-o'-the-wisp, cotton-future gambling, will dare take a chance to run amuck the penalties of the law, as provided in this bill.

The best method, Mr. President, to break up a gambling house is not to fine the proprietor at stated intervals for the privilege of running the game, but arrest and punish the frequenters of the gambling resort; and when this is known and understood there will be but few players. That is the object and purpose of my bill, to make it burdensome to the player as well as to the proprietor, and burdensome to the corporations— the great telegraph and telephone systems—who permit their wires to be used for the purpose of notifying players and victims of this great gambling house to be sacrificed and slaugh-tered by these gambling kings. It may be insisted, Mr. It may be insisted, President, that this character of legislation does not fall within the power of Congress to enact. Ah, sir, the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce between the States and between this Government and foreign countries. Cotton is essentially an article of commerce. The committee to whose report I have referred finds conclusively that this gambling in cotton futures is injurious to the commerce of the country and that Congress has the power, and should exercise it, to stop this character of gambling. Then, sir, I contend that if Congress has the power to punish the thing itself-that is, the gambling in cotton future it also has the power to prevent the use of the mails and the telegraph and telephone systems to carry intelligence and advice and invitations from the buyer to the seller in these gambling transactions that might be absolutely prohibited by law.

Let us consider, in the second place, the evil consequences of this character of gambling. I understand, Mr. President, that by it these gamblers fix the price of the products of the soil. They fix the price absolutely and unalterably of every bale of cotton, of every bushel of wheat, of every bushel of corn that is produced in this country. Again referring to the report of the Senate committee for proof of this proposition:

The corporation (meaning the New York Cotton Exchange) has absolute power over the dealings. All disputes and controversies are settled by a court established by the corporation itself, in what is called "arbitration proceedings." Neither party is allowed to call in a federal or state court. It fixes the grades of all cotton, designates the warehouses in which it shall be stored, fixes the fees and charges for storage, weighing, and all other work done in relation to cotton. It fixes the quotations of prices which are to be published to the world, and these quotations are thus fixed under its rules for months for which there were no actual sales.

It and its members have such wealth that it is claimed, in a published letter of one of the principal members, made in response to arguments made on the floor of this body, that the exchange can absolutely dominate and fix prices, as against all others, by flooding the market with offers of an unlimited supply of futures when at other places prices are, in its opinion, too high, and thus break the market; and on the other hand, when it deems prices too low at other places, may immediately buy all that can be offered.

They are, in fact, an oligarchy of wealth, self-created and self-perpetuated, which hold in subjection to their will the interests of the people of at least ten States in the Union.

In all these they assume and exercise a power of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in cotton which is vested by the Constitution in Congress alone.

This is strong language, Mr. President, deliberately expressed

This is strong language, Mr. President, deliberately expressed after months of careful study and investigation, based upon the testimony that these gamblers form an oligarchy of wealth selfcreated and self-perpetuated, which hold in subjection to their will the interests of the people of at least ten States of this Union. I say to you, sir, a fact which is well known in every cotton State in this Union, in every village, in every hamlet, in every town, that cotton, this great staple, this great commodity, can not be moved, can not be sold except at the will and bidding of this oligarchy of wealth built up by these gamblerswrung from the very heart's blood of the people of the South. The smallest farmer when he carries his cotton to town, 3 or 4 bales, perhaps, the fruits of the toil of himself and his wife and his babies, is met by the cotton buyer, who says to him:

I can not make you a price upon this, the product of your labor upon this great commodity which you are producing, until I consult the exchange; until I receive a wire telling me the price fixed upon your cotton.

By this great oligarchy of wealth, by this great gambling institution which is fast sapping the lifeblood of our people.

Sir, the great law of supply and demand that should regulate the price of all commodities has been wiped out, has been destroyed by this great combination of gamblers, this oligarchy of wealth that holds in subjection to their will the people of ten sovereign States of this Republic. Now, Mr. President and Senators, if these future dealings are gambling, and if they fix the price of the commodity, not by any law of supply and demand, but by the law of the manipulator, shall it be contended by any Senator upon this floor that this system shall longer continue? If we can not reach it by a direct law making it a crime to sell cotton futures, then, I pray you, sirs, let us reach it by this indirect method, by cutting off communication between the buyer and seller, by rendering the gambler helpless and impotent, by allowing his wicked and hellish business to die of its own filth and of its own putrid corruption.

Mr. President, it is no fulsome flattery for me to say that the agriculturist, that the farmer, is the most important factor in this great Government of ours; that he is the great basic rock upon which this great superstructure rests; that upon his shoulders rest the burdens of the Government. Ah, Mr. President, we can do without the merchant, we can live without the doctor, we can live without the banker, we can live without the railroad magnate, we can live without the bondholder who clips at stated periods his coupons, we can get along without the Senate of the United States, or the President of the United States; but, sir, this Government can not last for the twinkling of an eye without the man who toils, who labors, and who sweats. This Government can not exist for one minute with-out the man who feeds and clothes the toiling millions of the earth; it can not exist, Mr. President, without the farmer. Upon his efforts, upon his exertions, upon his daily toil we all depend, not only for the sustenance of life, for the very clothes we wear, for the food we eat, but the luxuries that surround us to-day, because from his labors and from his alone spring all the blessings of life. Then shall it be said, sir, that the Congress of the United States, the servants of the people, shall sit here in stolid silence and close their eyes to this great evil, refusing to enact a law that will give to this great wealthproducing class their just rights under this Government, that will tear down this oligarchy of wealth built up by these gamblers, and restore to the people the great law of supply and demand to regulate the sale of their products.

Mr. President, I plead with this Congress to-day to enact a law that will take the white women and white children of the South out of the cotton fields, that will give to the producers of this great commodity a fair return for their husbandry and their toil, that will build up schoolhouses and churches in the waste places of our land, that will make better citizenship, that will give better opportunities for education and development, that will make the Southland, the fairest spot on God's green footstool, bloom and blossom like the roses, and will return to honest husbandmen a fair compensation for their industry and their labor.

Mr. President, there is another great agency for evil so closely connected, so closely allied with gambling in futures that one can not be discussed independently of the other, and while the bill under consideration is not directly leveled at the New York Stock Exchange, yet, sir, to properly understand the one a consideration of the other becomes necessary. The New York Stock Exchange is a voluntary association of persons and is not incorporated, with a membership limited to 1,100. These memberships are known as "seats," and are sold at varying prices—in 1900 as low as $14,000 a seat, and prior to that time as high as $95,000 a seat. The membership of these two exchanges is almost identical, one, of course, not having as many members as the other, but they together embrace the richest, the most influential, the most powerful moneyed men of the the most influential, the most powerful moneyed men of the country. The dealings of each and both ramify every avenue of business and trade, are seen and felt in every feature of our commercial life, and control either directly or indirectly every business transaction of our country which shapes and de-termines its destiny. The combined wealth of the members of these two great exchanges whose interests interlock and entwine is fabulous, indeed, and staggers the mind of ordinary men to comprehend it.

From official sources, Mr. President, I have prepared a short statistical abstract of the origin, history, and dealings of the New York Stock Exchange, with its membership and their holdings and their methods of business, which I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks on this occasion, without taking the time of the Senate for its reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE.

The matter referred to is as follows:

This exchange was formed in 1792 by 24 brokers in the city of New York, under a tree near the present number, 60 Wall street. In 1817 the New York Stock and Exchange Board was constituted by 25 men. From that time down to 1853 it had its quarters in the Merhants' Exchange, at Wall and William streets. In the latter year it removed to Beaver and Wall streets, and in 1865 to its present location on Broad street.

It it a voluntary association and not incorporated, with a membership limited to 1,100. Members are elected and must be nominated by 2 men, who must say that they would accept the uncertified check of the nominee for $20,000. The initiation fee is $20,000. The dues are about $50. These memberships are known as "seats," and are sold or transferred at varying prices. In the seven years prior to 1900 these seats were sold as low as $14,000. In 1900 they were quoted at from $38,000 to $41,000. Prior to 1900 the highest price of a seat was about $95,000. In April, 1906, a seat sold for $84,000, and in March, 1907, for $73,000.

The original object and purpose of the exchange was to obtain unform commissions for the buying and selling of stocks, but this object and purpose has been enlarged during the one hundred and sixteen years of the existence of the exchange so as to include the purchase and sale of all and every variety of stocks, bonds, and securities, national, state, county, and municipal, industrial, public, and private; their manipulation, so as to control prices, and, in short, every form of speculation, legitimate and illegitimate, from the purchase and sale of stocks and bonds, with an honest delivery, to the wildest form of stock gambling and stock jobbing. The members of the New York Stock Exchange, as given by Moody for the year 1907, the latest available, together with the officers for that year, are as follows:

THE WEALTH AND INFLUENCE OF THESE MEN.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, of the original 24 founders, no one of them was a millionaire, and their combined wealth was less than one-fourth of what it now costs for a hundred seats. The eleven hundred members of the New York Stock Exchange comprise among its numbers the richest men of the world, but it has been said by several writers that many of them are very poor. It takes $20,000, however, to join, and at this rate per member, the New York Stock Exchange denotes an investment of $22,000,000. Thirteen of its members, beginning with John D. Rockefeller, are credited with the fabulous wealth of $1,355,000,000, as estimated in the table of the 51 plutocrats heretofore enumerated by me. The New York Stock Exchange, then, through 13 of its members, represents a wealth of more than $1,000,000,000, and the other 1,087 members may be safely credited with ten times this amount, or $13,550,000,000, in all about $15,000,000,000, or about one-seventh of all the wealth owned by the 90,000,000 people that constitute the United States. This is their estimated actual wealth. The ramifications of the membership of the Stock Exchange with other business enterprises make the influence of the exchange enormously greater. In the first place nearly every one of the members of the exchange is put down as a member of a firm or corporation, so that he represents, not only his own, but the aggregate wealth and interest of the firm or corporations or trusts, a fact which seems to give them the controlling influence in financial matters in the United States, an influence eagerly desired by the exchange and an influence which history proclaims has been exercised with very great frequency in the manipulation of prices, the cornering of stocks, the organization and management of panies, and, in fact, the exploitation of every species of stock gambling and stockjobing known to man. The financial history of the country teems with accounts, not only of the individual wrecks caused by the New York Stock Exchange, but also of the cyclonic pani

For instance, William Rockefeller is credited with an individual wealth of $100,000,000; he is also a member of the most gigantic corporation in the world—the Standard Oil trust; he is a director of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, whose capital stock is $50,000,000, and which owns $92, 000,000 of stocks and bonds in 45 subsidiary companies of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern; he is also a director of the Michigan Central, the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad, and the Pittsburg and Lake Erie Railroad, whose aggregate capital is about $33,000,000 and whose aggregate mileage is about 2,500 miles; he is also a director of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, with a capital of $100,000, 000 and mileage of 3,500 miles, controlling 34 constituent companies; he is also a director of the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad, with a capital of $26,000,000; also a director of the New York Central Railroad, with a capital of $180,000,000, and operating 12,000 miles of road. This road owned stocks or bonds on December 31, 1906, amounting to $147,000,000 in 75 constituent lines. The influence of this man alone, when interested in the manipulation of the prices of transportation in the United States, is enormous and becomes simply fabulous when united with the interests of other corporation magnates and trust sharks who desire to rob the public by bankrupting smaller and competing roads.

J. Pierpont Morgan is not a member of the Stock Exchange, but his son, J. Pierpont Morgan, jr., of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., represents the firm in the Stock Exchange. J. P. Morgan is a director in all the roads of which William Rockefeller is a director, with the exception of the Delaware and Lackawanna. To make up for this, he is a director of the Northern Pacific Railroad, with its 6,000 miles of road and $155,000,000 of capital.

H. H. Rogers is not a member of the Stock Exchange, but is a member of the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange. He is a director, also, of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, with a capital of $382,000,000; also a director of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, of 10,000 miles and a capital of $50,000,000; and he is also a director of the United States Steel Corporation and many other corporations and trusts.

August Belmont is a member of the exchange, representing himself and the combined Belmont interests. He is a director of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, with its $60,000,000 capital and controlling about 7,000 miles of road, besides representing scores of other corporations and trusts in the same capacity.

E. H. Harriman is a member of the exchange; a director of the Baltimore and Ohio, with its capital of $212,750,000 and operating 4,500 miles of road; also a director of the Chicago and Alton Railroad, with its $40,000,000 capital; also of the Erie Railroad Company, with its $217,000,000 capital; also of the Illinois Central, with $105,000,000 capital, and at the same time of the Union Pacific, made up of the Union Pacific, the Southern Pacific, and the Leavenworth, Kansas and Western railroads, operating 15,000 miles of road, with a combined capital of $396,000,000.

George J. Gould is a member of the exchange and a director of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad, with a capital of $88,000,000; also a director of the International and Great Northern Railroad, with a capital of $25,000,000; also of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, with a capital of $150,000,000, including the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern; also of the Texas Pacific Railroad, with a capital of $50,000,000.

Others of the stock exchange membership are either officers or directors of other railroads throughout the country, and their combined influence in the exchange makes it possible to murder or main any small railroad in the country at pleasure, as the various demands of stock gambling in the exchange may require. In this way not only the stocks and bonds of the smaller railroads of the country are placed at the mercy of the stock gamblers and robbers of the exchange, but the transportation of the whole country injuriously affected.

Not only does this membership of the exchange manipulate the question of transportation and transportation charges in its own interests and against the interests of the people, but it also exercises a tremendous influence on the telegraphic and telephonic connection of the country. On the directorate of the Western Union Telegraph Company, in bold relief, you will find the names of George J. Gould, J. P. Morgan, and E. H. Harriman. On the directorate of the United States Steel Corporation you will find the names of the United States Steel Corporation you will find the names of J. P. Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, jr., and H. H. Rogers. The names of these eleven hundred men, or at least the names of those representing its greatest wealth, may be found as officers and directors of iron trusts, steel trusts, lumber trusts, paper trusts, leather trusts, and all and every species of trusts known to mankind, besides being intimately connected with corporations allied to trusts and to corporations not so allied. They are officers and directors of the great national banks of their country and can manipulate a money panic whenever their greed demands. The Stock Exchange has its legitimate function, but stock jobbing and stock gambling form no part of this function.

There are economical writers who so far prostitute their talents under the seductive influence of corporation gold as to claim that there is no stock gambling and no stock jobbing in the New York Stock Exchange or the various other exchanges of the country. There are other economic writers who, under the same pay, admit what can not be denied, that a very large portion, in fact the greatest part, of the business of all of the exchanges is gambling pure and simple, but justify it on the ground of its necessity. Almost every great newspaper of the country keeps an editor, reporter, or correspondent at headquarters in Wall street ostensibly to keep the people informed as to the news, but really, under the pay of corporations, to gloss over the knavery of exchange transactions and to write stilted reviews of exchange dishonesty and fraud.

In the Washington Post of December 29 1908, one of these financial owls" had the following to say:

Ten points down and 10 points up—that is the record of Union Pacific performance in the last two weeks. On Monday, December 14, the stock sold at 1844, practically the highest of the year. A week later, on Monday, December 21, it fell to 1744. To-day it got up again to the starting point and a fraction beyond. Naturally many persons are asking who engineered the shake out. Even the most experienced operator is forced to admit it was clever, and if, following that, he said things that were not complimentary, it was because he had been bumped.

There is not a word in the article concerning the morality or legality of the transaction; on the contrary, the whole article is a silent tribute to the masterly rascality of the members of the close corporation, the New York Stock Exchange. I would like to ask any person who believes that there is no gambling in the exchanges of the country a simple question. By what right, moral or legal, does any man sell the stocks or bonds of a corporation in which he owns no share of stock, nor in the sale of which does he propose to buy in order to comply with the terms of sale? By what authority does any man sell stocks or bonds in a corporation which he does not own and which he does not propose to buy in order to make a delivery? I know that the rules of the New York Stock Exchange require a delivery in order to make the transaction show some shade of honesty. I also know that the very largest proportion of these transactions carry no real delivery—stocks are borrowed to meet the demands of the exchange rule, profits pocketed, and the stocks returned without a semblance of ownership in them, save that which is necessary to cover a gambling deal.

So notorious was this gambling device, "borrowing to perfect a gambling deal," that the legislature of New York was asked to make an investigation. This virtuous body, consorting with race-track gamblers of that State, refused to make the investigation. The governor of that Commonwealth, however, smarting under the charges made against the New York Stock Exchange with reference to the panic of 1907, and to keep a consistent record with himself as to all forms of gambling, Wall street, as well as race tracks, felt it incumbent upon him to make an investigation notwithstanding the failure of the legislature to authorize it. To his credit be it said that he has found competent men who are willing to serve without pay to act as a committee of investigation, and despite the handicap of such an investigation, it is to be hoped that this committee will ascertain who engineered the shakedown in the case of the Union Pacific of December, 1908, the greater shakedown of March, 1907, and the thousands of other shakedowns that go on day by day under the sanctity of the New York Stock Exchange.

In 1707, more than two hundred years ago, a great writer in London, in a remarkable pamphlet, attacked the London Stock Exchange as a band of thieves and robbers, and held that it was high treason against the Kingdom of England to be a member of that body. He argued and proved that every panic known to English history owed its origin to the thieves and robbers who made up the London Stock Exchange.

In 1871, J. F. Richmond, for years city missionary of the city of New York, and who has written a splendid little book on early life in New York City, has this to say of the New York

Stock Exchange:

The board of brokers claims to be composed of honest and honorable men only. Besides this board there are various other specific boards of all kinds of speculators—stock brokers, gold brokers, oil brokers, and cliques—uniting and resolving as occasion may offer opportunities of gain to ambitious and unscrupulous men. Among these originate the gold scrambles, the railroad wars, the raids on the banks, and other panics which crowd the streets with well-dressed but frenzied men, some flushed and violent, some pale and staggering, turning prematurely gray over the wreck of their earthly hopes.

I might multiply these quotations indefinitely, but this one covers the whole case. The laws of all States are severe in penalty as to pure gambling, which has led a noted writer, in a book quoted by Charles A. Conant, to use the following language:

If, instead of betting on something so small as falling dice, one bets on the rise and fall of stocks or on the price which wheat will reach some months hence, and if by such betting one corners the community in an article essential to its welfare, throwing a continent into confusion, the law will not pay the slightest attention. A gambling house for these larger purposes may be built conspicuously in any city, the sign "Stock Exchange" be set over its door, influential men appointed its officers, and the law will protect them as it does the churches. How infamous to forbid gambling on a small scale and almost encourage it on a large.

Charles A. Conant answered, or attempted to answer, it in the Atlantic Monthly for April, 1903. He admitted, frankly and purposely, that betting on the rise and fall of stocks as carried on in the New York Stock Exchange was gambling, but that it was nevertheless true that betting on the fall of a dice was wrong, while betting on the fall of a stock was right. This shrewd economist justified the righteousness of stock gambling on the basis of its necessity. That such gambling entered into the business relations of the entire country and could not be disassociated therefrom without a revolution, which would bring universal disaster. He argued further that there was no pure betting in the New York Stock Exchange, while admitting that a large part of the transactions partook of the nature of gambling. In other words, he differentiated gambling into two forms, pure and mixed. Pure betting, he said, was done in bucket shops, admitted that it was of no use to the community, and charged that it was destructive to the morals and pockets of young men, and argued that it could not be too highly censured.

Right here Charles A. Conant aligns himself with me, our difference being that what he calls the "mixed gambling" of the exchanges is nothing but bucket-shop gambling, and my bill seeks to drive out this form of unrighteous speculation from the exchanges of the country dealing in the products of the soil. We are all opposed to an open bucket shop, and we should be opposed to the same bucket shop disguised as an influential stock exchange. For I hold, and I think it can not be successfully denied, that every bet on the rise or fall of stock where no delivery is made or intended to be made or even thought of, except as borrowing enables the gambler to semble righteousness, is nothing but a pure bet, nothing but a bucket-shop transaction

In all speculation there is, first, the actual investor; he buys for two purposes, the interest and the probable rise, and exacts a delivery of the stock. This is not gambling, and my bill does not propose to interfere with it. This is honest business, honestly conducted, and deserves no reprimand at my hands. There is, second, the semi-investor, who buys on a wide percentage of margin, but keeps an eye to the interest and exacts an actual This man is something of a shark, but I can not say that my bill seeks to limit his sphere of operation. Then there is the margin investor, who pays no regard to the interest of the stock, does not intend to exact a delivery, except so far as the rules demand a delivery, and which will be met by borrowingone who buys and sells purely upon the possible rising and falling of the stock, looking to this rise or fall for his profit. is pure betting, pure bucket-shop dealing, and the New York Stock Exchange and other exchanges show a far greater number of deals of this kind than of the two others combined. It is this phase of exchange operations that has induced so many plutocrats to join the New York Stock Exchange.

McConihe & Co., of New York, in their little book issued in 1906, used these words:

Of recent years, however, and since the country at large has grown enormously rich, there has arisen a set of what might be called "millionaire speculators." They have more surplus money than they need to live upon and are men of big ideas. They like quick results on their transactions, and in no other form can they obtain them so readily as through the purchase and sale of stocks. These men will buy or sell thousands of shares at a time and have recently become one of the biggest factors in the market.

These are the millionaire gamblers, the colossal bucket-shop bettors of the exchanges, who are lauded to the skies by subsidized literary men, while the little nigger shooting craps is picked up and sent to jail.

I know that it is difficult to draw with exactness the line between bona fide business and business gambling, but at the same time it is not difficult to define the thousands of gambling devices that go unchecked under the cover of the sanctity of the New York Stock Exchange. Arthur Crump, in his "Theory of Stock Exchange Speculation," says:

Because it is difficult for governments to define in stock-exchange gambling where bona fide business ends and the gambling begins, the most injurious of all the games of chance is played year after year upon an increasing scale.

Because of the difficulty we, as legislators, are not to be excused if we permit these most injurious games of chance to be played year after year, and I think that a careful study of my bill will disclose a remedy for the wrong; and I believe that if it shall be enacted it will at once put a curb to the disgraceful and disastrous gambling features of the New York Cotton Exchange and the other exchanges of the country. It is almost universally admitted that gambling of the worst kind goes on under cover of these exchanges, and it is our duty, as I see it, so far as we have the power, to minimize its ferocity, even though we may not be able to entirely destroy its frenzy.

though we may not be able to entirely destroy its frenzy.

A careful analysis of this abstract, Mr. President, will show that 13 members of the New York Stock Exchange are accredited with a wealth of more than \$1,300,000,000, and the other 1,087 members may be safely estimated at ten times this amount, or \$13,550,000,000; in all, about \$15,000,000,000, or 7 per cent of the entire wealth of the 90,000,000 people that constitute this United States. Add to that, sir, the wealth of the membership of the New York Cotton Exchange and you have a sum that equals at least 15 per cent of the entire wealth of this Nation; add to this the wealth of the men directly and indirectly assoclated and affiliated in business relations with these two great exchanges and you have 51 men whose wealth equals 35 per cent of the entire wealth of the United States, and 4,051 men whose wealth equals $87\frac{1}{2}$ per cent of the entire wealth of the Government, a list of which was given by me in a speech delivered on December 11, 1907. Seeing, Mr. President, this great combination of wealth of these two great gambling institutions and their allied forces, that control 871 per cent of the wealth of this entire Nation, is it a wonder that the committee of this Senate, headed by Senator George, found that the New York Cotton Exchange, one of the tentacles of this great octopus, had built up an oligarchy of wealth that held subject to its will the chief product of 10 of the sovereign States of this Republic. Not only so, Mr. President, but this combined force of gamblers can murder and stifle competition, can bring about a panic at will in the money markets of the country, can cause stagnation in business at will, and thus reap golden harvests by means of their illegal transactions.

The bill which I here present, and for which I bespeak the careful consideration of the Senate, is directed at the lesser of these two great evils and is intended to so cripple it and so destroy its power of communication with its patrons that its evil effect may be destroyed. Gentlemen of the Senate, can there be any wrong in this bill? In your own hearts and consciences answer me the question, Ought not this great gambling institution to be destroyed? It may be said that the penalties of this act are too severe. I think not, Mr. President. If a postal official, knowing the illegal character of a letter that is being transmitted through the mails, fails to arrest it and place it in the hands of the proper official, he shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000; shall be removed from office and not allowed to again hold an office of profit or trust under the Government. If the ordinary individual shall violate the provisions of this act by sending a letter or by using the telegraph or the telephone for the purpose of engaging in this illegal transaction, he shall be adjudged guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than five nor more than fifteen years. If a corporation running one of these gambling institutions or owning a telegraph or telephone system shall be guilty of violating any of the provisions of this act, they shall be fined in any sum not less than $10,000 nor more than $100,000, one-half of which shall be paid to the informant.

Ah, Mr. President, if we would destroy this evil we must lay the ax at its very root; we must, by penalties sufficiently severe, dig it up root and branch and make a participation in this gambling transaction so hazardous, indeed, that none will dare to risk the penalties of this statute. Mr. President, the suppression of this great evil and the consequent crippling of the New York Stock Exchange means not only a relief for the Southland, but for the great West as well. Ah, it means more than this, Mr. President; it means a brighter day for this Republic, and renewed hopes for our toiling people. Let us for a moment consider the condition of our Government to-day. It may be repetition, Mr. President, but I say it without fear of successful contradiction, that the money power of the country has so tightened its grasp upon the arteries of trade and commerce, has so stifled competition that the Government itself is upon its knees to-day begging quarter at their hands. What is the wealth of this Government, Mr. President, and of what is it composed? I submit, sir, a table taken from government statistics showing the wealth of this Government, which I ask to have printed in my remarks without reading.

Mr. DAVIS. This table, sir, shows in round numbers that the wealth of this Government is $107,000,000,000. How is this wealth of this Government is $101,000,000. How is its wealth divided? How is it distributed among the 90,000,000 people of this Republic? As has been shown by me upon a former occasion, 51 men, all of whom are directly or indirectly connected with these two great gambling institutions, own 35 per cent of this wealth, and 4,000 other men, who own not as much as twenty millions in wealth, but more than one million, added to the 51 men and their holdings, makes the alarming showing that 4,051 men own 871 per cent of the entire wealth of this Government. How did this condition occur, Mr. President? How was it brought about? There is a reason for it. Nothing ever happened in this world but that behind it is a prompting and promoting cause, and as I see it to-day the cause of this great concentration of wealth lies chiefly along these lines. Our people, sir, as a whole-North, South, East, and West-were more prosperous and happy just subsequent to the great civil war than now. It is true that the Southland, from which I hail, in this great conflict had been laid waste and made barren; our homes had been destroyed, our fortunes had been dissipated: but the confederate soldier, as brave and as true and as gentle as ever lived upon God's green footstool, returned to his desolated home, and with a bravery and chivalry unequaled in modern history, that challenged at once the wonder and admiration of the world, set about to restore his fallen fortune, and how well he has succeeded history itself may repeat.

But the people of this entire Government, I contend, were more prosperous, taken as a whole, just subsequent to the civil war than they are to-day. We had few tramps then. lionaires of this Government, Mr. President, at that time might be numbered upon my one hand. The people, as a rule, were prosperous, contented, and happy. They naturally were divided into two great classes, working in two different fields of indus-The one class, upon my right, the larger class numerically, set about to work in the fields of human endeavor, the fields of human enterprise. Every implement of human industry that could be contrived was brought into play whereby this great army of industrial workers might earn bread, as God commanded, in the sweat of their faces. They worked in the fields, they worked in the shops, they worked in the mines, they worked behind the counters, they did everything whereby an honest penny might be turned for the support of themselves and those dependent upon them. The other crowd, upon my left, smaller in number, viewing the situation from a human standpoint of selfishness, from a standpoint of greed and avarice, chose to work in other fields, the field of legislation. They sought, Mr. President, to gain public favor, to secure blessings and benefit through the legislative branch of this Government not enjoyed by the toilers in the fields of human endeavor. What has been the result? In your mind view the two crowds to-day. See the workers in the fields of human industry; see how their backs are bended beneath the burdens of government; see how their breasts and arms are bared to the heat and burden of the day; see how they toil and sweat. On the other hand, view the crowd that has chosen to work the fields of legislation. They toiled not, neither did they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these,

This crowd working in the field of legislation first came to the Government, I shall not say directly or by improper influences, and they asked of the Government a great benefit, a great blessing, that was not enjoyed by the other crowd working the fields of human endeavor. They asked, Mr. President, to be permitted to issue the money of the country. In my imagination I can hear the servants of the people, the Congress of the United States, denying this request. I can hear the reply that this is in direct violation of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that Congress alone shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, but by importunities, sir, by continued asking, the Government finally yielded, and in June, 1864, the Government of the United States turned over to this crowd, working the fields of legislation, the most important function of the Government-that is, the power to issue the money of the country. To the national banks was surrendered this important function, and from time to time they have issued sums varying in amount, but there is outstanding to-day money issued contrary to the Constitution, an amount equal to $700,000,000. Mr. President, why was this blessing asked by the crowd working the fields of legislation? Because they knew the power of money; they knew its controlling influences; they knew that if they could get a corner on this important function of the Government they themselves could control the Government. Well did they know that money is the blood of commerce; that this blood must circulate freely from the center to the extremities and back again in a free and healthy circulation, if a healthy body politic should obtain. Looking far into the future, knowing the power that money would give to them, and a still greater power by controlling the circulating medium of the country, they asked and obtained this great benefit from the Government of the United States.

Ah, Mr. President, it would seem that this blessing, that this benefit thus acquired by them, as against their brethren that worked the fields of human industry, ought to have satisfied this crowd that worked the fields of legislation; but, sir, human experience has taught, the history of all republics that have gone the ways of the world, have fully demonstrated that it is difficult to satisfy the maw of greed and avarice; so this crowd, working the fields of legislation, desired a still further and a closer corner upon the blood of commerce and the money of the land; they turned again to the Government and said: "Mr. Government, give us yet another blessing, give us yet another favor, not enjoyed by the toilers of the earth. Place a tax on all state banks that are empowered to issue money; place a tax of 10 per cent thereon. This will drive these little banks out of the money-issuing business and will give us yet a tighter grasp on the control of the money of this Government.' Mr. President, in February, 1875, Congress acceded to their wish; taxed out of existence the little state banks that were in competition with this crowd that worked the fields of legisla-This, it seems, sir, should have satisfied this crowd, but it did not do so. They again returned to the Government and they said: "Mr. Government, we want yet a closer corner on money; we want yet a closer corner upon the wealth of this land. We ask that you retire the greenbacks of the country, that they may no longer be a circulating medium among this crowd that works the fields of human endeavor." In my imagination I can hear the voice of Congress when it said: No; this shall not be done. Greenbacks-it is the money of the plain common people of the land; it is the money of the laborer and wage-earner; it is the money of this crowd that work the fields of human endeavor; it shall not be retired; it shall be left to them as their money." But the crowd working the field of legislation, still persistent, procured an act passed by Congress in January, 1875, withdrawing the money of the people from circulation. While it is insisted that three hundred people from circulation. While it is insisted that three hundred millions of this money is in circulation to-day, yet, sir, I appeal to the American people, I appeal to the workmen in the fields of human endeavor, to say to me whether or not this is true.

Ah, Mr. President, it would seem that this crowd, working the field of legislation, having acquired so many benefits, so many advantages, might at this point stay their hand and the further withering, blighting influence of their ill-gotten gains, but not so. I shall not, Mr. President, attempt from memory to give these events in chronological order, but they again return to the Government and say: "Mr. Government, give us another benefit, give us another blessing, give us another advantage not enjoyed by the crowd working the fields of human endeavor. We nesk that silver be struck down; we ask that silver be demonetized; we ask that gold be made the money of final redemption, and that silver be made redeemable in gold." No one was found bold enough, Mr. President, to attempt this great atrocity; no one was found bold enough to place upon record a measure that would bring about this diabolical and dastardly crime, bearing his name, or assume its authorship; but, like a thief in the night, with cat-like tread, the measure was slipped through the Congress of the United States under a false pretext, under a false guise, striking down the money of the laborer, striking down the money of the wage-earner, striking down the money of the crowd that works the field of human endeavor, striking down the money of the Constitution, giving to the crowd that work the field of legislation yet a closer grasp, yet a tighter corner on the great volume of the money of the land, a closer corner on the blood of commerce. Ah, Mr. President, with these advan-tages, with these benefits not enjoyed by their brethren in the field of human endeavor, is it a matter of astonishment, is it a matter of wonder that to-day 51 men own 35 per cent of the entire wealth of this Nation, and 4,051 men own 871 per cent, and the average American citizen, the average man among the remaining 89,000,000 people, owns less than $500 in property

Ah, Mr. President, when will this crowd of cormorants, this crowd of avaricious thieves and gamblers reach out their long, bony fingers to grasp the remaining 121 per cent of the wealth of this Nation? Just when they feel so secure in their position that they think the American people will stand it. Ah, Mr. President, it would seem that this should have satisfied this crowd working the field of legislation; but not so. They again return to the Government and, having grown strong and bold, on July 24, 1897, they demand of the Government that they be permitted to tax every article consumed by the crowd working the field of human endeavor. In my imagination I can hear the Government say that already this crowd is laden with bur-dens grievous to be borne, and if further burdens are placed upon them it must be so disguised that they will not understand it, that they will not appreciate it. This crowd of de-spoilers working the field of legislation reply: Let us so sugar coat it, so capsule it as that they will not understand it. We will place a tax ostensibly only upon foreign-made articles brought into this country for consumption. Certainly no objection can be raised to this, and we will do this under the guise and specious pretext that it is for the purpose of protecting American labor employed in the factories of the East and North. The Dingley bill was passed; a tax was laid upon the consumers of the land, upon the toilers, upon the shoulders of the men who are the foundation and support of the Govern-

Mr. President, I pause for the purpose of saying that if the tax of the people of this Government, paid not for the purpose of revenue, but to enrich the coffers of this crowd that work the field of legislation, were paid directly, like our state and county taxes are paid, to the sheriffs, the American people would not stand it for twenty-four hours. There would be such a revolu-tion in this country as would shake it from center to circumfer-ence; but under this pretext that this burden was laid for the purpose of helping the American laborer and to support the Government, the crowd that works the field of human endeavor, long-suffering and patient, have thus far borne this burden. How does this tax, Mr. President, make the rich richer and the poor poorer? Is it a tax only upon imported article? I say "No." most positively, "No." The American manufacturer is permitted. under this form of legislation, to charge for an American product a price just a little lower than the foreign article with the tax added, and thereby reap not only a wholesome profit but the benefit of the tax as well; and if this did, in fact, help the laborers of the East and North, it might, in a sense, be justified, because God commands that we bear one another's burdens; but, sir, I deny that it benefits the laborer. In 1907 the farmers of the South and West were fairly prosperous, the god of the harvest had blessed them with bountiful crops, their barns were full, their stores laid in for the winter, the little country mer-chant had bought his goods for the coming season, his credit was fairly good, the local banks throughout the South and West were reasonably prosperous, and their money was scattered from the home bank to the great money centers of New York to cover their bills of exchange. Everything was moving along in its usual normal condition, but the South and West awoke one morning in the fall of 1907 to find itself in the cold, merciless grasp of one of the most terrible panics that had ever occurred in this country.

This panic, Mr. President, was organized on less than 5 acres of ground in New York, where these two gigantic gambling institutions ply their wicked vocations. If I am told that this tax laid upon the crowd that works the field of human endeavor is for the benefit of the laboring man of the North and East, I ask you to go with me to the great cities and there inspect the great army of the unemployed as it marches with sober, grum, threatening mien in full review; go with me to New York, if you please, stand with me on the Brooklyn Bridge at the close of the day and see the great throng of humanity as it surges across that great thoroughfare; see the little children that ought to be in school or around their mother's knee coming grimy and dirty from the sweatshop; see the poor mother with babe in her arms, who has been trudging the streets all day begging for bread, going to her hovel of squalid poverty and want; see the laboring men out of employment, with desperation written upon their faces, returning empty-handed to their helpless, dependent families; go to the homes of the poor, go to the homes of the unemployed, go to this great army that is marching up and down the land to-day begging not for bread, not for a hand-out at your back door, but an opportunity to work, for an opportunity to earn their bread as God commanded, in the sweat of their face; for an opportunity to run the race of life freely, unshackled, and unhindered; and tell me, if you will, that this tax has brought blessings to the laboring man of the North and the East.

Ah, Mr. President, this oligarchy of wealth, builded by legislation, and legislation alone, has reduced to almost serfdom the laborers of this section of our country. They have reached that point in the history of the laboring world that they can say to this man, "Go," and he goeth; and to another, "Come," and he cometh. They dare not resist their master's will; and not satisfied with their power there, they are yet conspiring to subjugate the laborers of the South and the West and to bring them under the yoke of their bondage by means of advantages gained in working the field of legislation. Ah, Mr. President, this is a dark picture. I know not what the result may be. For the past twelve months the country has been regaled with an exhaustive and learned argument as to whether or not the President of the United States had the right to discharge a lot of kinkyheaded niggers from the army, who, in a drunken riot, shot up a helpless and defenseless people. And more recently we have been urged to increase the salary of all our public officials, that they might more closely imitate royalty.

We stand to-day face to face with a deficit in our Public Treasury of $150,000,000. Our Government is bankrupt, yet we are appropriating the money of the people at the rate of perhaps a million dollars an hour. The majority in Congress seem to be drunk on the wine of success. They fiddle and dance and make merry while Rome burns. I say to you, Mr. President, that it is time we were calling a halt, and that the Congress of the United States legislate for a little while in the interest of "Old Man People." He is a good old man, bowed and bent with years; venerable, with long, flowing beard. You have each met him. Simple and confiding, trustful and hopeful, he looks to this Congress for some relief, and I ask the Senators here to lend an attentive ear to his demands before it is everlastingly too late.

Mr. President, to what extremes will this oligarchy of wealth go in their desperation and madness? It can be best illustrated by a brief study of ancient history. One of the greatest reformers that lived in ancient times was Julius Cæsar. He loved the poor people of Rome, and when he returned from the wars of foreign conquests, laden with rich treasure, he found great throngs of poor people in the streets of Rome feeding from the public coffers. Did he use this treasure, Mr. President, in riotous living, in great feats and entertainments? No; he commanded that the rich land along the Tiber be bought with public funds, divided into small tracts and given bought with public funds, divided into small tracts and given to the people that they might earn their bread in the sweat of their face. Cæsar found that a conspiracy against the poor had been formed by Brutus, Cassius, and Casca, and the Roman nobility. He found that they were lending money at the ruinous interest of 49 per cent; he found that the rich were hoarding their wealth and that money, the blood of commerce, was not circulating freely among the people. Cæsar's will was law, and he said to this crowd of conspirators by legislation, "You hall not charge a greater rate of interest them 121 per cent shall not charge a greater rate of interest than 121 per cent for the use of your money, and shall not lend a greater sum than one-half the amount you have invested in property; you shall not hoard more than $3,000. If you do you shall be subjected to the heavy penalties of the law." Would to God we had Cæsar in the White House to-day! This enraged the conspirators, the Roman Senate, and when Cæsar, upon that fateful day, walked into their midst believing that he was among his friends, surrounded by the treachery of the money power, twenty-three knife wounds pierced his body, and when he saw the blade of Brutus his trusted friend, raised high in air, he drew the mantle of his cloak about his face and in his dying breath exclaimed, "And thou, too, Brutus!" and fell dead at the feet of the statue of Pompey. This, sir, is a brief history of Rome and its great reformer, illustrating the terrible fate that lies in the path of any part of the status that lies in the path of any man who seeks to shake loose from the throat of this Government these parasites of wealth, these stock gamblers, these stock jobbers that attempt to control the destinies of the Government.

Ah, Mr. President, the money power may be pressing the American people too far. In some evil hour, in some unguarded moment, a match may be touched to the fuse that connects with the hidden mine of discontent and dismay that is planted beneath this Republic, and I shudder for the consequences.

I read a little story in a New York paper recently, illustrating aptly, I think, the recklessness and wanton disregard of the people's rights by the money power of the Government. It is said that a beautiful Italian girl with considerable property married one of her countrymen, believing that he was all that her young heart had pictured him to be. Soon she discovered he was addicted to that terrible vice, the liquor habit. Their home soon became a drunkard's home, her property was squandered, poverty in all of its hideous forms knocked at their door, until finally she was compelled to go out and earn a living for her drunken husband. She was finally brought into court and tried, and to the judge she said:

Judge, he finally suggested that I sell myself for his support; he pressed me too far, Judge, and I killed him.

Ah, Mr. President, the money power of this Government is treading upon dangerous ground. They do not know, or else they do not care, that the people are already ground down with taxation and the weight of Government until their backs are almost broken beneath its load. They do not seem to appreciate the fact that in his power and strength "Old Man People" may rise and smite them. I would not be an alarmist, sir, but I predict here and now that unless conditions change, that unless the Congress of the United States turns a listening ear to the lamentations of an outraged public, that within ten years there may be another Shenandoah Valley, there may be another Gettysburg; the red broom of war may sweep this Government as it has never been swept before, and when that day shall break in all its fury, woe to the crowd working the field of legislation that have laid these grievous burdens upon the backs of the crowd working the field of human endeavor.

Mr. President, we of the South make but a simple request; we ask only the passage of a law that will protect the products of our soil; we ask a law that will stay the ruthless hand of the gambler, and give to the men and women of the South a just return for their labor and toil.

And to this end, sir, I submit the bill under consideration, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be so referred.

During the delivery of Mr. Davis's speech, The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I do not see the Senator in charge of the bill present, but I am sure that he would wish to lay it aside temporarily so that the Senator from Arkansas may proceed with I make that request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. DAVIS. I am grateful to the Senator from Wyoming. promise that I shall consume but a few more moments of the Senate's time.

At the conclusion of Mr. Davis's speech,

INDIAN SCHOOL AT MORRIS, MINN.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7472) transferring the Indian school at Morris, Minn., to the State of Minnesota for an agricultural school.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 5, line 10, after the words "by a," to strike out the words "bill or joint resolution," and insert "legislative act;" in line 13, after the word "act," to strike out "or joint resolution;" in line 16, after the word "act," to strike out "or joint resolution;" and in line 21, after the word "act," to strike out "or joint resolution;" and in line 21, after the word "act," to strike out "or joint resolution," so as to make the clause read:

Provided further, That this grant shall be effective on July 1, 1909, if before that date the State of Minnesota, by its legislature, shall, by a legislative act, accept the terms of this grant, and in said event the said State of Minnesota shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a certified copy of said act, whereupon this grant shall take effect without further act; and the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior upon a certified copy of said act of the legislature of the State of Minnesota, showing the date of the filing thereof with the said Secretary of the Interior, and showing said date to be prior to July 1, 1909, shall be competent proof in all courts of record of the filing of such certified copy of such act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON TO MARSHALL COUNTY, W. VA.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24151) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate two condemned brass or bronze cannon or field pieces and cannon balls to the county court of Marshall County, W. Va.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 11, after the word "That," to strike out the words "the articles of ordnance property furnished under the foregoing provisions of this act shall not be required to be accounted for to the Chief of Ordnance and;" and on page 2, line 4, after the word "in," to strike out the words "the delivery of the same" and insert "connection with the donation of the above-mentioned articles or ordnance property," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate to the county court of Marshall County, W. Va., two condemned brass or bronze cannon or field pieces, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, which may not be needed in the service, the same to be placed about a monument in honor of the soldiers from that county who served in the civil war, erected on the court-house grounds of said county, and for which the said county court are trustees: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in connection with the donation of the above-mentioned articles of ordnance property.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DEMETRIO CASTILLO, JR., OF CUBA.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Mr. Demetrio Castillo, jr., of Cuba. It is a very short joint resolution, and it is very important that it should be passed at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. FULTON. I do not care to object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I simply wish to say that, after it is disposed of, I shall call up the regular order, which is the omnibus claims bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of War to permit Demetrio Castillo, jr., of Cuba, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, but no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended for this purpose.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. FULTON. I now understand that the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] wishes to have the unfinished business taken up. I did not understand that when I made the announcement I made a few moments ago.

Mr. CARTER. It is my desire that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to present an amendment and to submit some remarks on the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate, I desire to modify the amendment that I have heretofore the words "ratably according to their capital."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa modifies his amendment. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 8, on page 1 of the amendment, after the word "village," it is proposed to insert "ratably according to their capital," so as to read:

ment, after the word "village," it is proposed to insert "ratably according to their capital," so as to read:

SEC. 10. That the Postmaster-General shall, as herein provided, deposit postal savings depository funds received at the post-office in any city, town, or village in the bank or banks organized under the national law or a state or territorial law and doing business in such city, town, or village, ratably according to their capital; and if in any such city, town, or village there be no such bank, or if the funds have been received at a post-office not within a city, town, or village, then in the nearest bank or banks in the State or Territory: Provided, however, That no depository funds shall be deposited in any bank organized under a state or territorial law unless the laws of the State or Territory in which it is located require public supervision and examination: And provided further, That such examination shows the bank to be solvent not only as to creditors, but with unimpaired capital.

Before a deposit is made in any bank as above authorized the bank shall agree to pay interest thereon computed upon the daily balance at the rate of not less than 2½ per cent per annum. Each bank receiving deposits under the authority of this act shall from time to time give such suitable bond or bonds, with surety or sureties to be approved by the Postmaster-General, as will indemnify the Government against loss. If the banks herein described as the banks in which the funds are to be deposited refuse to accept a deposit or deposits upon the terms and conditions above described, then and in such case the Postmaster-General may use any bank designated by him and complying with said terms and conditions for such deposit or deposits; or he may invest the same in state, territorial, county, or municipal bonds to be selected by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General. Interest and profits shall be applied first to the payment of interest accruing to depositors in postal savings dep

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in view of my very brief service in this body, it is with great reluctance that I ask attention for a little while to the amendments I have proposed, and were it not that I believe that the State which I have the honor, in part, to represent is peculiarly interested in this measure I would not attempt to impose my opinion upon Senators of wider experience and more extended observation.

The truth, however, is that Iowa, although not the most populous State in the Union, although not the richest State in the Union, has more banking institutions than any other State in the Republic; and it is because I am profoundly convinced that this measure, if adopted in the form presented by the committee, would seriously endanger those financial institutions, and, if not destroy, at least disturb a condition which has heretofore been found safe in our State, that I venture to discuss the amendments which have already been submitted.

First, as to my personal attitude toward this bill. These amendments are not proposed from a hostile point of view. have two reasons for favoring a postal bank or postal depository system. The first is that I believe it is the duty of the Government of the United States to provide a safe and convenient depository for its poorer people, and, second, because I belong to a political organization that has pledged its faith to the people of the United States for the establishment of a postal savings system.

I quite agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], who yesterday said that the pledge in our platform did not commit anyone to a specific measure, but as I view the obligation which I have undertaken, it does commit members of our political organization to an honest effort to agree as between themselves upon the terms of a postal savings bank measure; and if the particular bill reported by the committee has objections that make against it, then it seems to me that it is the duty of every Republican Senator at least to remove those objections if he can. It is because I have felt such an obligation resting upon me, especially in the interests of my own people, that I have already presented the amendments to which I now call the attention of the Senate.

This bill, as is apparent to anyone who has given it the most casual reading, may be divided into two general parts. First, it provides a system for the deposit of the money of those who desire to take advantage of its provisions. I am not wholly persuaded that the machinery which has been devised in the bell, as reported by the committee, is the best machinery that can be provided for this purpose. I do not intend, however, at this time to comment upon any objections to the details of the plan as outlined in that part of the measure.

The second grand division of the measure relates to the disposition of the money collected by the Government at its postoffices, and after having given the subject some study, it is my opinion that the plan outlined, and somewhat specifically provided for in this division of the bill, would destroy the banking and industrial conditions which prevail throughout a large part of the United States.

I wish to be clearly understood. I intend to vote for this bill if it can be so amended that it will serve and promote the object which I know its author had in view without destroying the financial and industrial conditions as they now exist.

With that explanation I call attention to my amendments. The first of them seeks to strike out wholly section 10 of the This section presents four distinct propositions, the first of them being, quoting from the bill:

That postal savings depository funds are hereby declared to be public moneys and subject to the safeguards and preferences provided by statute therefor.

This clause of section 10 is supplemented and completed by a further clause in section 11, which reads as follows:

If any bank in which such funds as so deposited shall become insolvent, such funds shall be a prior lien upon its assets and shall be first paid, to the exclusion of all other indebtedness of every kind and nature whatsoever.

I am unalterably opposed to this feature of the bill. I believe it is fundamentally wrong to give these deposits a priority in payment over the ordinary depositors of a bank. It is not fair to make the ordinary depositor guarantee the payment of the savings depositor, and if that injustice is not so manifest that it becomes obvious to every mind upon the mere reading of that part of the bill, I despair of deepening the impression.

I shall not at this time speak of the wisdom of the general statute which gives to public deposits a preference over other deposits. It may be that something can be said-I doubt not something can well be said-in favor of the general policy of making moneys that are collected from the people for the purposes of defraying the ordinary expenses of the Government a prior lien upon the assets of the banks in which they are de-I have no suggestion to make with regard to that policy which has heretofore, as I understand, been pursued by the Government of the United States.

These moneys, however, are of an entirely different character. The Government of the country undertakes to receive from the savings depositor his money from time to time and hold it safely and return it to him upon demand. When the Government deposits funds of that character in a bank they ought not to become a lien upon the money of an ordinary depositor who seeks to do business with that bank. I can not conceive of any reason which should give to such depositors or to the Government as their agent this advantage over the ordinary commercial population of the land.

Nor, as it will presently appear, is it necessary that there shall be this security given to the government deposits. There are other ways of indemnifying the Government against loss. We are establishing this system—if we do establish it; and I hope the prophecy of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] will not be fulfilled-for the general good and to promote the general welfare, and if there be losses entailed in carrying on this business, those losses ought to be borne by the people for whose benefit this system is established, and they ought not to be borne by a particular class of creditors or of depositors who may find it necessary to seek these banks in the transaction of their business. I have therefore sought to eliminate entirely this feature from the bill.

The second proposition suggested in section 10 is as follows: After their receipt from depositors they shall be exempt from demand, garnishment, execution, attachment, seizure, or detention under any legal process against the depositor thereof.

I believe this is also essentially wrong and unjust. not at this moment undertake to declare whether it is or is not in the power of Congress to exempt these funds from such process as the State may legally employ to reach them. It is well known to every lawyer that the United States is not suable, and therefore this clause is not necessary to exempt the Government of our country from suit, and I believe it ought to be the opinion of Congress that the question whether these deposits shall be exempt from the payment of the debts of those who make the deposits should be remitted to the several States. It is a subject concerning which the States alone should legislate. It is the policy of the Commonwealths which should control upon such a subject, and not the policy of the General Government.

The third division of this section is as follows:

Such funds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States or my State, county, or municipality.

The most immature reflection, as it seems to me, upon this provision ought to exhibit its weakness. I believe there is not a lawyer in this body who will not agree with me upon this proposition: The States have absolute power of taxation upon all the property and all the persons within their borders, except as their right and power are limited by the Constitution of the United States. It is not possible that it will be insisted upon at this time, and in the illumination upon this subject, which can be seen throughout a long course of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, that Congress has the power to withdraw any property whatsoever from the taxation

The Constitution of the country, which is paramount not only over Congress, but over the States, has exempted certain property from the right of taxation on the part of the States. That exemption, however, can not be extended by any act of If the postal savings bank deposits, viewed from the standpoint of the depositor or the standpoint of the Government, are means for the accomplishment or execution of lawful powers of the United States, then they are exempt by virtue of the Constitution itself. Whether they are so exempt is not a legislative question. It is purely a judicial question. Congress can not determine it. The courts will necessarily determine it whenever a suitable case is presented to them for decision. Therefore I have sought to eliminate from this bill a provision which, as it seems to me, passes far beyond the constitutional power of Congress to incorporate in it.

The fourth division of section 10 is one concerning which I have but little to say:

And no person connected with the Post-Office Department shall dis-close to any person other than the depositor the amount of his or her deposit, unless directed so to do by the Postmaster-General.

My observation is that the operations of the Government are sufficiently secretive not to need any additional safeguard of this kind. I know of no reason for suppressing this informa-tion from anyone who legitimately inquires after it, and therefore it seems to me this also should be eliminated from the measure.

I have now passed over the four features of section 10. Not a single one of them ought to remain in the bill. Not one of them is necessary to accomplish the purpose which the American people had in view in declaring for a postal savings bank measure, and some of them I believe would so embarrass the operation of the law that we would not be able to do the things that those who favor any postal-bank measure desire to accomplish.

I now pass to my second amendment, which is a substitute for section 11. I need not read it as a whole, for I can state it with more brevity. The bill as reported by the committee commands the Postmaster-General to deposit in the nearest practicable national bank the moneys collected at the several My objection to it is that the Postmaster-General is limited in the selection of his depositories to national banks, and it is this feature of the measure to which I referred a few moments ago when I said that I believed that if it would not destroy it would unnecessarily and seriously disturb existing conditions.

My amendment proposes to extend the privilege to all state banks, to all banks organized under state laws which are, according to the laws of the States in which they are organized, subject to public examination and supervision. Possibly it would be well to read the first few lines of the substitute I have offered for section 10.

That the Postmaster-General shall, as herein provided, deposit postal savings depository funds received at the post-office in any city, town, or village in the bank or banks organized under the national law or a state of territorial law and doing business in such city, town, or village ratably according to their capital; and if in any such city, town, or village there be no such bank, or if the funds have been received at a post-office not within a city, town, or village, then in the nearest bank or banks in the State or Territory.

The first suggestion, I am sure, that will occur to those who do not favor this enlargement of the depositories is that there would be danger of loss to these funds if they were deposited in banks over which the National Government itself did not exercise the power of supervision and examination. I will be compelled in answering this objection to refer to the history of my own State. I have not extended my examination in this respect to other States. It may be taken for granted, however, that all of the States exercise that wise authority over such institutions as insures the safety of their deposits.

I said a moment ago that Iowa had more banks than any other State in the Union. With our 2,300,000 people, we have more banks than the State of New York or the State of Pennsylvania or any other community in the world of equal number. We have at the present time—and I will give round numbers only-1,300 state banks and national banks. We have 300 and more private banking institutions. The amendment I propose, however, does not extend the privilege to private banking It limits the privileges to the banks organized under the law and subject by the law to examination.

I have before me a brief statement which I ask to include in the discussion to which I am now passing. It may be of interest to those who do me the honor to give me their attention. At the close of the year 1908 there were in Iowa 872 state business. To these institutions are to be added, in making up the total that I gave a moment ago, the national banks of the State. I am now, however, dealing only with state banks.

The average amount on deposit in the state banks, including savings banks, for six years has been $200,995,890.78. In the six years from 1902 to 1908, both inclusive, nine of these banks have failed, which have paid less than 100 per cent to depositors. The aggregate amount on deposit in these nine banks at the time they suspended was $960,999.05. The percentage of deposits in failing banks paying less than 100 per cent to the total deposits for six years is a little less than one-half of 1 per cent. The percentage for one year—and, mark you, I am now comparing the total on deposit in the failing banks with the aggregate average deposit of all the banks—is one-twelfth of 1 per cent. The average paid to depositors by these failing banks has been 72.54 per cent. So the percentage of loss per year to depositors has been a trifle less than one forty-fifth of 1 per cent. Reducing this to concrete form and assuming that the Government might have at the end of a few years on deposit in the state banks of Iowa $10,000,000, the yearly loss, if it had no indemnity whatever, would be $2,200.

The bill that we are now considering would involve at once the employment in the city of Washington of more than 500 additional clerks. So the loss in the State which I in part represent in a whole year would be scarcely more than the salary of a single one of these clerks for that year. I trust that upon this statement all fear that any serious menace to the interests of the Government is involved in the suggestion that these depositories be enlarged will be at once dismissed.

May I continue this comparison for a moment? deposit in national banks in Iowa from 1902 to 1908, both inclusive, was $75,851,000. Four banks have failed in this period, with deposits amounting to $1,483,965. They have not been wholly liquidated; but up to October 31, 1908, dividends had been paid aggregating $306,694. The loss to depositors, therehas been $1,177,271. The percentage of loss, compared with the average deposit for seven years, is 1.54 per cent; or, for one year, a little more than double the percentage of loss suffered by the depositors in state and savings banks.

Therefore, if you are seeking places in which these moneys will be safest, without exacting any security whatever, it is obvious that you will seek, not the national banks, but the state and the savings banks, organized under state laws. In what I have said I have assumed that every State is equally watchful, that every State attends to its honor with the same care and the same concern. Far be it from me to attempt to elevate in this presence the Commonwealth which I have the honor in part to represent, above any other Commonwealth represented upon the floor of the Senate.

It seems to me, therefore, entirely apart from the matter of security, I have shown as conclusively as history can show, that it will be safe for the Government of the United States to deposit these funds in state banks as well as in national banks.

And there is a high imperative reason for so doing. There is in my State not a village of 200 people-I think I may safely make the absolute assertion-that has not at least one bank. The business of the State has gathered around these banks. The commerce of the communities depends upon these banks. The advantages which they give to the people in their localities are essential to the industrial and the agricultural life of a State like mine.

Any proposition which will take the moneys which naturally flow into these localities under the laws of trade and commerce and business and artificially remove the moneys to any other place must be fatal to the best interests of the country

I will not paint so beautiful a picture as appeared before my eyes under the stirring eloquence of my friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn], but I can imagine in a day of stress and storm, when suspicion is filling the air, this same company of depositors, not in the post-offices, but in the little banks, marching up to take their money from the bank and deposit it in the post-office.

I have no objection to that, for I desire above all things to fortify the confidence of people in the return of the moneys which they save; but if, being so withdrawn, the post-office takes the money and sends it 50 or 200 miles away, then the whole life of that community is at once paralyzed, and the banks will find it less easy to perform their natural functions than they have in former years; whereas if, when the days of trouble come and the depositor in the bank feels that he ought to have greater security and safety for his savings than in the bank, and he appears and draws his money from these institutions and takes it to the post-office, and if in twenty-four hours banks, savings banks, and trust companies doing a banking or in five hours or in one hour, according to the administrative work of this machine, the money is again deposited in the very bank from which it came, you have restored the normal condition in that community and you have permitted it to resume its financial or its commercial energy in the usual way.

I can not conceive why anyone should desire to take from these communities the money which gathers there under an imperial law that Congress can neither amend nor repeal, and at the very moment at which it is most needed carry it away to a bank that, whether 25 or 50 miles distant, is foreign to the life of that particular locality.

I understand perfectly the general objection that arises in-stinctively in the mind, and that is the possible loss to the General Government. That does not terrify me. We are doing something here, we assume, for the general good, and I would vastly rather see these losses repaired from the general revenues of the Republic than to see the money with which the country must do its business forcibly torn away from its natural place and deposited in a foreign institution.

But recognizing the force of that feeling, which I assume must be in the minds of many Senators, the amendment which I now submit provides absolute indemnity to the General Government. I have adopted in this amendment the practice with which I have been familiar for many years. If you will pardon me, I will refer to my own experience as governor of the State of Iowa. When the State of Iowa has money to deposit in her banks—and the State of Iowa has money to deposit in her banks—she takes from the bank an indemnifying bond. The State of Iowa would not fasten upon the assets of the bank a lien for the moneys that she deposits, but she requires those who are pecuniarily interested in the bank-those who make a profit out of the operations of the bank, and who are therefore concerned in its prosperity-to give a bond that if the bank fails to return the deposit on demand, then they will make the return. In all the history of the State there is not a single suggesion of a loss of public moneys, and therefore the amendment which I proposed contains this provision:

Before a deposit is made in any bank as above authorized the bank shall agree to pay interest thereon computed upon the daily balance at the rate of not less than 24 per cent per annum.

It is not pertinent to the present discussion, but I do not desire to be foreclosed upon the rate of interest. that rate because it is the one provided for in the bill, and I do not care to raise any question about it. As I look at the matter-of course, from an inexperienced standpoint-I think the rate of interest is higher than the practice will warrant; but it is not necessary to suspend a great measure like this for such criticism.

Each bank receiving deposits under the authority of this act shall from time to time give such suitable bond or bonds, with surety or sureties to be approved by the Postmaster-General, as will indemnify the Government against loss.

This is the suggestion I have incorporated into my amendment as a substitute for that part of the pending bill which makes these deposits a lien upon the general resources of the

I repeat, the people of this country will repudiate a measure which compels the ordinary depositor, who receives no profit in the transaction, to guarantee the payment of the savings deposited. I am not averse to the Government guaranteeing the savings deposited. I am in the habit of stripping things and I recognize, and every Senator must recognize, in this bill a device which is the equivalent of a government guaranty of savings-bank deposits. I am quite willing to meet and acknowledge that avowed purpose of the bill. I have no hesitation in giving my vote to the project that the Government shall provide a place absolutely safe in which those who have suspicion of the banks may deposit their savings, and thus promote their own welfare and secure their own happiness; but I have not deceived myself with regard to the real character of this

Mr. President, having thus submitted the amendments that I have proposed, at the proper time—whenever those who wish to speak upon the amendments shall have said all that they desire to say-I shall ask for a vote upon them.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the amendment presented by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins] is divisible into four parts, and at the proper time, when approaching a vote, I shall call for the division, which, I believe, is allowable under the rules of the Senate.

I doubt if upon full consideration the Senator from Iowa will insist upon the first part of his amendment. Section 10 he proposes to strike out entirely. The subdivision which may be denominated "subdivision No. 1" provides—that postal savings depository funds are hereby declared to be public moneys and subject to the safeguards and preferences provided by statute therefor.

That is a definite and distinct proposition. Probably the language employed is not happy, and it may be that it does not accomplish the purpose in view. The real underlying thought connected with that sentence was to avoid the reenactment of numerous provisions of our laws relating to the protection of public funds, the punishment of embezzlement, and the

The volume of law relating to the misappropriation, embezzlement, and other criminal disposition of public funds is quite extensive, and it is manifestly desirable to avoid the enactment of the various statutes for their incorporation in this bill; and yet in the absence of any statutory provision for the protection of these funds we would be driven to the ordinary sections relating to larceny and embezzlement as applicable to funds gen-

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.
Mr. CUMMINS. I certainly did not make myself wholly My view of it is that Congress can not make a bay horse white by calling it white. If these moneys collected, as they are to be collected, are public moneys, they will receive all the benefits and have all the safeguards of public moneys, and the mere characterization of the moneys as public moneys would not accomplish the fact,

Mr. CARTER. The statute might undoubtedly provide that all safeguards for public moneys would be applicable to the moneys received at the post-offices in the course of the operation of this law, without any reference to characterization or attempt to create a new or different substance by mere name.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly. Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to submit a question to the Senator. Could the credit which the Government receives at a national bank when it deposits any class of money there be public funds under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which has defined the character of money depos-ited in a bank of any kind? When it was deposited in a bank, then the Government would become a creditor of the bank, because the bank, by the terms of the bill, is authorized to mix the government moneys with its own and deal with it and loan it out as it would deal with and loan its own.

Mr. CARTER. Unquestionably the relation of debtor and creditor would be created between the Government and the bank in which the deposit was made.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, if I may be pardoned—
Mr. CARTER. But there is no attempt in this section to follow the money into the bank, where it becomes commingled with other deposits, with a view to attaching to it permanently the character of public money. It will there be subject to the contract relation between the bank and the depositor in the

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, Mr. President, under the provisions of the bill, with the permission of the Senator, it ceases to become public money as soon as it is deposited in the banks.

Mr. CARTER. The money to the credit of the Government is there.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it ceases to be public money.

Mr. CARTER. But the section we are discussing has no relation whatever to the contract which will arise between the United States and the bank in which the money is deposited any more than is the character of public money preserved in a bank where it is deposited now. The relation of debtor and creditor arises where money is deposited in a national bank to-day in New York, New Orleans, or any other part of the country.

But, Mr. President, we wander from the purposes of this particular part of the proposed law. The postmaster, for instance, sells a money order and receives the amount of the face plus the commission provided by law. That is money in the hands of the Government for the purpose of executing a scheme of exchange or transmission, and yet by law it is made public money in so far as the safeguard provided for public money may be concerned.

It is the purpose of this particular section to have a like character stamped upon these postal receipts. For instance, the postmaster at a given place receives $1 for postage stamps, $1 for a money order, and another dollar for a postal deposit. All of this money is to be regarded in the light of the criminal statutes relating to the embezzlement or misappropriation of any part of it as public money.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Would the Senator from Montana object to striking out the word "deposit" and substituting the word "loan," so that the Government shall loan this money to the

Mr. CARTER. While discussing this particular feature of the bill the Senator, I am sure, will excuse me from entering upon another and entirely independent proposition.

I challenge the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the purpose which I have stated as attached to the first part of section 10, to which he takes exception. It has no other purpose than to make applicable to these funds in the hands of United States officers the penal statute providing for the protection of public funds.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.
Mr. CUMMINS. I think that is true; and I do not mean to be otherwise understood, save in this respect: You have used the word "preferences" in the last part of the sentence. I believe that that is intended to give the government deposit a preference, and I assumed that the first part of the sentence was not necessary, because in the very nature of things this is public money, and therefore is entitled to the safeguard to which you refer. You can not make it Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-You can not make it other than public money.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I have no objection to that part of the Section remaining in.

Mr. CARTER. There can be no injury flowing from the specific statement of that which may be taken for granted by inference. That portion of the section might well be rewritten so as to read-

That postal savings depository funds shall be entitled and subject to the safeguards and protection and preferences provided by statute for public moneys of the United States.

Passing, then, from that section, which is the portion of the section which I understand the Senator from Iowa does not expressly object to

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply desire to ask the Senator if he does not recognize a very important difference between the public mouey as ordinarily understood and the money provided for in this bill? It is sensible enough to give the Government a prior lien for deposits of public moneys, and it proceeds upon the theory that the Government collects simply what it needs to support itself and could not be postponed in the use of those funds; otherwise it might seriously interfere with the ordinary operations of the Government. But no such reasoning as that could possibly apply to the moneys collected and deposited under this bill. Such moneys would have no relation to the ordinary conduct and expenditures of the General Government.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, they have very apt relation to the operations of this law if passed by Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.
Mr. CUMMINS. I am solicitous about one thing. The Senator suggested a moment ago that I would yield my amendment with regard to this sentence. I beg that he will not so understand. I insist upon my amendment with regard to the sentence, because it has the effect of giving the deposit a preference over other deposits in the bank.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, passing from that, I shall not now consume much time, save to point out what I conceive to be objections to the Senator's amendments, as there happens to be other business which is in the view of Senators somewhat pressing this afternoon.

As to the second subdivision of the Senator's amendment, that which provides for striking out the portion of section 10 exempting these funds from garnishment, I take direct issue, and I believe that, independent of any specific provision in this bill exempting the funds or any part of them from garnishment, they would be exempt under the rule of law laid down in Buchanan v. Alexander, in 4 Howard, to which I wish to direct the attention of the Senate.
Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CARTER, Yes. Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will say that I should like very much to have an executive session this afternoon. Will the Senator be kind enough to lay aside the unfinished business for that purpose?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, realizing the earnest desire of the Senator from Illinois to have an executive session, I will forego further observations with reference to the amendment at this time, and yield to the Senator from Illinois.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 27, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, January 26, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 26399. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. J. Res. 202) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural cere-monies on the occasion of the inauguration of the Presidentelect on March 4, 1909, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested: S. 8302. An act to incorporate the "Descendants of the Signers"

S. 7325. An act for the relief of Cadmus E. Crabill;

S. 6550. An act granting an honorable discharge to Thompson

B. Pollard; and S. R. 119. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to award gold medals to Orville Wright and Wilbur Wright.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution reported by the Committee on the Library. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (No. 247) relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, and for other purposes. Resolved, etc., That the 12th day of February, 1909, the same being the centennial anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, be, and the same is hereby, made a special legal holiday in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States: Be it further Resolved, That the President be authorized to issue a proclamation in accordance with the foregoing, setting apart the 12th day of February, 1909, as a special legal holiday.

The SPEAKER—Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether this is the only method which it is expected will be adopted for the honoring of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln?

Mr. McCall. Mr. Speaker, that is a very pertinent question. I trust it will not be the only method. There is a difference of opinion about the character of a memorial which should be erected to Abraham Lincoln, and also as to its location.

Mr. MANN. In that connection, may I say to the gentleman that a very distinguished fellow-townsman of mine, Mr. Burnham, one of the recognized authorities in the world, has made some suggestions in reference to that, according to the newspapers, and I would like to know if the gentleman can in-

Mr. McCALL. I was coming to that. I would say that there is a difference of opinion as to the character and location of the memorial, but there is no difference of opinion whatever as to the propriety of making the 12th of February, 1909, a legal holiday. So we reported this resolution, which should pass at once, in order that a proclamation may immediately be issued.

With reference to what the gentleman has said, I do not wonder that he is somewhat confused on account of the multitude of protests, so called, that have been printed in the newspapers against a scheme which does not exist. There is a great advantage in not knowing anything about one's subject, because one is not hampered by facts, but can give free rein to his imagination; and these various protests that have been recently printed from architects throughout the country are not directed to anything pending in the House of Representatives.

During last May the Committee on the Library reported a bill for a memorial to Lincoln which contemplated doubling the size of the Capitol grounds, something that is very desirable because of the fact that the long axis of the grounds is too short, and needed also to give the appropriate entrance to the Capitol; and we believed that somewhere on that 40 acres of land the resources of American art might be equal to devising and building some appropriate memorial to Abraham Lincoln. This bill was reported last May, and public attention was directed to it in the newspapers of the country. There was ample opportunity for the development of indignation then, but none came. no ripple of indignation seen during the summer or fall.

On a sudden, during a single week in January, seven months afterwards, societies of architects in widely separated parts of the country—in Boston and Seattle, in New York and New Orleans—all decided to become indignant at the same time. [Laughter.] This would be a curious psychological phenomenon if gentlemen had not had some experience. When you find that indignation has been triumphantly repressed during seven months, and it then comes from everywhere all at once, you know that somebody has pressed a button [laughter], and that is simply what has been done in this case. The man who pressed the button did not know anything about the subject [laughter]. and he communicated his ignorance to the rest of the country. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, there are three or more propositions for memorials to Lincoln. One is by the construction of a road to Gettysburg; another is a memorial upon a location down below the Washington Monument, and almost under its shadow, on the Potomac; and still another is upon the location to which I have called the attention of the House. The location on the Potomac River is one that appears in the so-called "Burnham plan" for the artistic development of Washington, and undoubtedly in the scheme of that park it is a location fitted to some admirable work. When it is a question of the fitness of a work of art to a given location, that is one thing, and the opinion of artists upon it is of very great value; but when they come and say the place shall be to Lincoln, or to any other particular statesman, that is a question that appeals to the historical imagination, of which the artist has no monopoly.

There is something I think important to bring to the attention of the House and the country, which may somewhat sur-prise some gentlemen who are so simultaneously and unanimously defending the Burnham plan, and that is a cablegram received some days ago from a gentleman to whom my friend from Illinois alluded, Mr. Burnham, one of the great architects of the world, a man who, probably more carefully than any other architect, has made a study of the question how to beautify Washington, a man whose own name is imperishably identified. fied with the plan to which I have alluded. Here is his cablegram:

LONDON, January 22, 1909.

Three or four different ways of memorializing Lincoln have been proposed. The choice depends largely on sentiment, of which Congress itself is the best judge.

But entirely apart from sentiment, a monumental architectural treatment of the entrance way to the Capitol is demanded by every consideration of artistic unity and of sober propriety; and there is not a shadow of a doubt that a peristyle extending around the plaza and up Delaware avenue, as shown by us before I left for Europe, is the right solution. This design should be carried out, no matter what name it bears.

That is signed by D. H. Burnham, and I commend it to the attention of some of our architectural brethren as bearing upon the question whether that portion of the city is susceptible of artistic treatment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Library has not recom-mended a peristyle; they have not recommended an arch nor any other form of art nor any location except in the most general way, but they believe when this necessary extension of the Capitol grounds is made, when we provide for a proper approach of the Nation to its Capitol, the artists of the country may be able to erect upon some portion of it a suitable memorial to Lincoln. But we are willing to avail ourselves of any new light, and none certainly has been shed by the angry denunciation of some of the architects. The so-called "Burnham plan" shows a memorial to Lincoln near the banks of the Potomac. same place might also be devoted to some other great character. Why, it might be asked, should Lincoln be fronting the South? He had no designs upon the South; he was supremely a friend of the South. He is almost the one man among the antislavery men who in all that controversy said no bitter word about the masters, but who recognized the burden of the inheritance of slavery which they had received from past generations, and whose desire it was to break the chains that bound the master and the slave in a common bondage.

Why should he not be placed, so far now as sentiment is concerned, where he may face the whole country, near the gateway to the Capitol, through which millions of his countrymen shall pass each year in time of peace, and through which, too, if, unhappily, war shall ever come again, the youth of the country shall enter, coming from the North and the East, the West and the South, thank God, to defend the country? And will it not be fitting also that their first glance shall take in at once the memorial of the man who saved the Nation and the Dome of its Capitol? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BIL

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I request unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government be disagreed to, and that a conference be requested of the Senate.

Pending that, I desire to make this brief statement to the House: There are 205 amendments to the bill, involving in the aggregate $664,224. Excepting the amendments increasing the compensation of the Speaker of the House, the President, the Vice-President, the judges of the Supreme Court and other judges of the United States, the additions to the public service proposed by the amendments of the Senate are not unique or extraordinary, and there is no doubt but that a conference committee can reconcile such differences

If this request is agreed to by the House, I am prepared to give assurance that no final agreement will be reached on the amendments indicated without affording the House an opportunity of a separate vote on each one of the four amendments.

I therefore present my request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the legislative appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, from the Speaker's table, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate and request a conference. there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. GILLETT, and Mr. LIVINGSTON.

HARBOR OF TACOMA, WASH.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25406) authorizing the settlement or adjustment of legal disputes concerning tide lands adjacent to the harbor of the city of Tacoma.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill; and pending that I should be glad to see if an arrangement can not be made to limit the time of general debate. suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] that debate close at 1.30 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that we go on without limit to-day and determine that question to-morrow

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no serious objection to that. Then, I will make the motion, first asking unanimous consent that the time of general debate be divided equally, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Overstreet was agreed to.
Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill (H. R. 26305), with Mr. Currier

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to make an extended comment on the bill; but I do desire to explain, very briefly, to such of the Members as care to hear, the general features of the bill and increases made necessary, in the judgment of the committee, on account of probable increase of service during the next fiscal year.

The appropriation for the postal service for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, carried $222,960,892. The bill which is now presented aggregates $234,534,370. It is an increase over the current appropriation of $11,573,478, or an increase of 5.19

In the items of appropriation which the analysis of the bill will disclose the committee has followed the usual order of appropriations so as to furnish what, in its judgment, will be amply sufficient for the various branches of the service

A large proportion of the appropriation for the postal service must naturally and necessarily involve the payment and compensation of officers and employees. That, of course, must be given attention, as well as the additional appropriation made necessary by the probable increase in the service for the fiscal year for which the appropriations are now made. We have, however, been careful in our efforts to provide sufficient funds in making computations so that the increased service will not occasion any impairment of that high standard of efficiency which the service has enjoyed for so many years last past.

Naturally, Members are interested in knowing what provision may be made for increased salaries of employees. On account of the importunities of the various employees of the service, evidenced by the insistence to members of the committee to increase salaries of employees, I have sometimes thought it might be proper to change the title of the bill and let it read "making appropriations for the increased salaries of postal em-But the committee have not been unmindful of the necessities of increasing the salaries as a factor and important element in determining the standard of efficiency. The classification act relative to clerks and carriers in the first and second class offices enacted into law a short while ago makes necessary increased appropriations to provide for the classification and make the automatic promotion provided for in the classification act. We are unable to determine in advance how many employees will become eligible to promotion under the classification act during the fiscal year by reason of the requirements of the full annual service in the next lower grade and an efficiency grade. But we assume that practically 100 per cent will be entitled to promotion under the classification act, and therefore make provision, so far as the automatic features of the classification could control, for that many promo-tions under the classification act. As a matter of fact, the full 100 per cent are never advanced, because the full 100 per cent never meets the requirements of the law as to continuous twelve months' service or the maintenance of a proper grade of efficiency. That usually runs, according to experience; in the limited time of the operation of the classification act, from 93 to 98 per cent. There is in this bill ample provision for 98 per cent of clerks and carriers who will be promoted under the automatic provision of the classification act, assuming that all of them would be able and efficient for twelve months' continuous service in the next lower grade, and enjoying a proper efficiency record during that time.

This measure would carry, therefore, in addition to the annual rate of expenditure of the various employees based upon the salaries that they drew on the first day of the fiscal year, and also in addition to the new employees of the various branches made necessary by the increased service, a very goodly sum to meet the requirements of the automatic promotion under the classification act.

It is estimated, Mr. Chairman, that, speaking in round numbers, there are practically 30,000 employees in offices of the first and second classes. This legislation carries sufficient appropriation to promote almost two-thirds of those clerks in offices of the first and second classes. There are approximately 26,000 carriers in offices of the first and second classes, and this legislation carries sufficient appropriation to promote 13,000 carriers of the first and second class offices. There are 15,000, approximately, carriers of the Railway Mail Service, and this provides for the promotion of about 6,000 of those.

These promotions I have enumerated of the three divisions of the service are in addition to the salaries which they would be drawing at the end of the current fiscal year, and I believe, therefore, that the committee has been unusually liberal in its recommendations purely for promotion purposes of the employees, when we take into consideration the condition of the revenues, not only of the general fund of the Treasury, but the revenues of the postal service as well. It is estimated by the Postmaster-General in his last annual report that the revenues of the postal service for the current fiscal year will increase 8 per cent. I may say, in passing that the per cent of increase estimated in the reports of former Postmasters-General has been 9 per cent and not 8 per cent; but in the last annual report he estimates that the increase during the current fiscal year of postal receipts will be 8 per cent. Taking that as a basis and his estimates for the expenditures of the current fiscal year, he estimates that the deficit in the postal revenues, the difference between the receipts and the expenditures for the current fiscal year, will be approximately $16,000,000. Unfortunately the panic under which the business of the country suffered so severely, beginning with the com-mencement of the panic in the month of October, 1907, lasted longer than was anticipated, and business did not rally so that the business conditions were restored to normal as rapidly as those who have given attention to such subjects believe the business conditions would be restored. Assuming, therefore, in the month of October last that business conditions would be greatly benefited prior to the beginning of the next fiscal year, the Postmaster-General no doubt was justified in basing his estimate upon the probable increase of revenues during the current year of 8 per cent. Most unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, later developments disclose that the per cent named is much too high.

On the 1st day of January of the present year, taking the basis of inquiry which is used generally by the postal officials in ascertaining the estimates for the revenues, it appeared that for the first half of the current fiscal year instead of the revenues increasing at the rate of 8 per cent, the per cent of increase was but 2.56 per cent. Therefore, assuming 2.56 per cent as the basis of the increase of the postal revenues for the entire fiscal year ending June 30 next, instead of the postal deficit being as estimated in October last by the Postmaster-General approximately $16,000,000, it would exceed $26,000,000. I hope that the revenues will increase more than the 2.56 per cent, and of course would rejoice if they should reach the maximum of 8 per cent; but in the month of January, on the 26th day of that month, we will be justified in challenging the attention of the House and the committee to the probability at least of the revenues not increasing during the remainder of the fiscal year by 8 per cent. Therefore your committee, framing this measure as it did two or three weeks ago, feeling that the revenues would not increase 8 per cent during the fiscal year, gave the most careful attention to the items of appropriation in order that, first, the efficiency of the service might not be impaired by a curtailing of the appropriations; and, second, with a due regard to the proprieties, to the necessities, and to the merits of the various employees, that they should be afforded fair treatment in the items peculiarly applicable to the promotions.

The Postmaster-General, in that same report, estimated the increased revenues for the approaching fiscal year by 8 per cent, assuming that the revenues during the current year should increase 8 per cent, and during the next fiscal year should increase another 8 per cent, basing his estimates for expenditures upon his recommendations, made the calculation that the postal deficit for the fiscal year 1910 would be approximately $16,000,000. I think there is far better reason to anticipate an increased per cent of the revenues during the fiscal year 1910 than during the current year, and therefore your committee has taken that element into account, and notwithstanding the heavy losses in the postal receipts and the probable heavy deficit during the current fiscal year, has made a very liberal recommendation for promotion purposes solely, and ample recommendation in its judgment to care for all the needed service so as not to impair its efficiency during the fiscal year 1910.

I think, Mr. Chairman, in a general way that will explain the general scope of this bill. The various items, many in number, and varying in degree, will be reached under the five-minute rule in the reading of the bill, and there would be perhaps more appropriate places to direct special attention to them. I will not undertake a detailed recital of these various items of the bill, but I suggest that after many weeks of inquiry and careful scrutiny of all of the estimates, the committee has come to a wise conclusion in its recommendations and makes such provision that it believes the House can justify its action in giving the bill the support of the House. I reserve the balance of my [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire only a few minutes on this bill. The House will observe that this is the largest bill ever presented for appropriations to the Post-Office Department since the Government began. Ten or twelve years ago the appropriation for the Post-Office Department was about $89,000,000 per annum. This bill carries some two hundred and thirty-odd millions of money, and yet the postal facilities for the people of the United States are by no means adequate. If I were to prophesy, I should predict that if the people of the United States obtain the benefits from the mail service to which they are entitled within the next ten years, if this country progresses in population and material interests as it has in the past, this House will have presented to it a bill of not less than four hundred millions of money for the postal service. There is no extravagance, in my opinion, in the bill now presented. It is, perhaps, one of the cleanest bills that has ever There are no appropriations that have come to this House. been made, in my opinion, which could have been well left off and the public service properly subserved. There are many things it would have been well to have done which can not be done under this bill. We would have been pleased if the whole postal system and business methods of this department could service the best that is in them, and the men who, in a large have been revised in this bill, but that is impossible under our The postal commission has reported already, however, a bill for the purpose of codifying and revising the postal laws of the United States and establishing a modern system in place of the antiquated system now in vogue, which we hope to I do not believe that under the present system of administration of the postal affairs of the United States, both in the department and postal service, that it would be possible, considering the question of transportation and all kindred questions connected with it in the Government, to come within ten or fifteen millions of dollars of what ought to be paid for the service that is rendered to this Government, not taking into consideration those ordinary errors in the service which always occur. At a later day of this session this committee hopes to present to the House the reorganization bill mentioned for the whole of this department, and in view of that fact there are many features which might have been attached to this bill which are not now necessary to be considered. There are some minor matters I shall refer to I would be glad to have seen in this bill if it were possible—an increase of salaries of clerks in post-offices and city and rural free-delivery carriers of the Government. I should have been much pleased to have seen that class of government employees called the "railway mail receive some further consideration at the hands of this Government. The great hazardous work that they undertake It has been suggested that this Government shall pay to railway mail clerks a sum of money that will cover traveling expenses. Again, others are contending that the Government shall keep an account of the expenses of railway mail clerks and provide for the same.

I am not averse to an increase of the salaries of these clerks so as to cover any part of their proper expenses, or all, if the Federal Treasury were in a situation to bear every strain in the way of increase that has been suggested, but it is not in such a condition at this time, and any increase in salaries is not proper to any great extent. I do not like the suggestion by some gentlemen that we shall keep an account of the meals and lodgings of employees of the Government. It suggests an idea of care and paternalism on the part of the Federal Government over its employees that does not strike me kindly. believe it would be better when we come to consider this question to give an increase of salary, so that these men may have the benefits of the suggestion that is made to grant them their expenses and yet leave them as competent and honorable men ought to live in the service, without being subject to the petty annoyance of keeping accounts themselves or to have accounts kept for them for their expenses. But these are suggestions in passing merely. We are told by the Committee on Appropriapassing merely. We are told by the Committee on Appropria-tions that the Government is facing a very large deficit. It is insisted, and properly insisted, that each and all of the departments of this Government ought to retrench and reform as far as possible in expenses. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads concurred with the suggestion, and whatever the cause of the deficit may be, whatever may have brought it about, to whatever it may be traceable, it seemed to us that our patriotic duty was to make this bill as light as we could (although it is the largest bill ever made) consistent with the interests and welfare of the people, and to avoid all possible extravagance in administration. We felt that this committee, as the Rivers and Harbors Committee is compelled to do, as other committees of this House are compelled to do, must retrench as far as possible, so that the Government may meet properly the deficit, that the incoming administration shall be embarrassed as little as possible in conducting the affairs of It is not necessary that I go over the various features of this bill, so lucidly explained by the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman, although in general terms. can safely submit this measure to the House with the hope that there will be no serious effort to add to it a greater burden of expense to be borne by the Government than it contains, which we feel would be improper to be done under present conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY],

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes I am going to occupy the attention of the House on the appropriation bill now before us, I shall devote myself only to the salaries and conditions of the postal employees, the men who are the backbone of the entire system, our carriers and post-office clerks, supervisors, and railway mail clerks. These are the men who make it possible for us to receive our daily letters, our newspapers, and our packages. They are the men who, in all kinds of weather and under all sorts of conditions, give to the postal measure, are responsible for the efficiency of our system. And I venture to say that there is nowhere a better set of men, a more faithful body of workers, nor, as a whole, a more honest force than these same clerks. I do not claim that they are perfect and that they do not make mistakes, but when you stop to consider the thousands upon thousands of letters and other matter going through the mails and note the few losses chargeable to the clerks who handle this mail matter, you marvel at the efficiency and the skill of these workers.

I may be pardoned for speaking perhaps from sentiment. I am intimately acquainted with the postal service. For nearly half a century I have been connected with postal affairs. I was for almost thirty years postmaster of New Haven, Conn., and ever since coming to Congress I have been on the Post-Office Committee. It is through this experience I have learned to love and honor the "boys" of the service. [Applause.] I am ready at all times to assist them, and to defend them when they need it. Ever since I have been a Member of this House I have advocated measures that I believe to be for their benefit and for the good of the public service.

Their requests this year—as is also true of former years—are not unreasonable. The clerks and carriers in our large postoffices were, a couple of sessions ago, divided into classes ranging from $600 a year to $1,200, but each year we are called upon to appropriate money enough to carry out this provision from the $1,100 to the $1,200 grade. This year we have appropriated enough in this bill to promote about 50 per cent of the clerks and carriers in the $1,100 grade to the higher one. wish it were a hundred per cent, but the committee decided otherwise, and I understand the clerks and carriers are not urging a change before the House at this time.

A peculiar condition of affairs arises in many instances in the case of supervisory clerks, those who direct the work of others, or those who have charge of stations. In my own district, especially in the city of New Haven, we have a number of very important stations of the main office. Some of these stations have carriers; one of them in particular does a very large money-order and registry business. The work of the superintendent in charge in all cases is very important and responsible, more so than in many of the post-offices where the postmaster's salary is $2,000. And yet not a single man in my district in charge of a station gets more than $1,200 a year. Some of the clerks under him get that much. The same conditions prevail in other sections of the country. It is not conducive to good discipline and to good service to have this state of affairs continue, and so the present bill, at least to a certain extent, takes I am told, from the calculation of the Post-Office Department, that between the grades of $1,200 and $1,800 there will be something like 400 promotions under this bill. also ought to give to many superintendents in the main offices and their assistants increased salaries, all of which tends to improve the service.

While we have therefore increased and equalized the salaries of a great many of those employed in our post-offices in the present bill, the committee refused to grant the request of the railway mail clerks, which was for their per diem expenses while away from home. This proposition was voted down in committee, and I regret this action very much, for the clerks on our railway mail cars are perhaps the hardest worked of all. Their work is certainly more dangerous, more wearing, and they have to constantly keep studying.

There are about 14,000 of these clerks. In the last five years it is estimated that 76 men have been killed on duty, 541 have been seriously injured, and 2,346 slightly injured, making a total of 2,963 killed or injured. They get on an average a salary of $1,152 a year. Out of this they have to pay for their own meals, and so forth, when away from home. Last summer the Post-Office Department ordered the clerks to keep track of their daily expenses, and from the facts gathered it was estimated that each man averaged $132 per annum, making their total net salaries per man about $1,000. These figures, as well as others I have mentioned, are furnished by the department.

What they were seeking from the committee was an allowance of not more than $1 a day per man, little enough for each one; but, unfortunately, this amounts in the aggregate to $2,000,000 a year, a large lump sum, but very small when you consider it is divided up among men all over the country. Their claim, in my opinion, is just and fair, and ought to be granted. I hope to see the day when this House votes to give these men the amount they now ask for, and I stand ready at any time to vote The Post-Office Department favors it, and would see to it that the distribution of the funds would be fair and equitable. We ought to give the clerks this encouragement, and show them that we appreciate the good work they have done, in many instances under adverse conditions.

Now, let me call attention to the business side of this proposi-When a young man enters the postal service he expects to make it his life work. Each year increases his efficiency and his worth to the people he serves. But to keep him in the service, we must pay him money enough, otherwise he will leave, and a new man takes his place. This is bad for the post-office where he works or the postal route on which he distributes letters, and the service necessarily suffers in consequence. The people want their mail delivered promptly and correctly, and they are willing to pay for it. Keep the men we have in the service, the men who have learned the business, and the only way we can do this is by paying them fair wages and by treating them with the consideration they deserve.

I am one of those who believe that the postal service will never be self-supporting, certainly not under present conditions. We may cry economy here in Congress-and as a general proposition it is a good cry-but one thing is certain, the people do not want their mail facilities curtailed. They want creased, if anything, and are willing to pay for it. Look at our rural free delivery, for instance. When we started that the cry went up that it would cost a great deal of money. It does; no doubt about that. But would our farmers and our citizens in the smaller towns and villages go back to the old system? I know they would not, and after all they pay for it and are entitled to it. [Applause.]

The people want to see their servants well paid. This great Government of ours does not want to get the reputation of being a close-fisted master. There is no department of the Government so close to the people as the Post-Office Department. We are all interested in it and want to see it grow and develop. We do not want to be in the same class with a gentleman in New Haven in the early sixties, who said that I ought to be hanged for trying to install letter boxes at the street We want the best there is everywhere. The people demand it and will have it. And we, as the servants of the people, ought to give it to them. [Loud applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY].

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, I am especially interested in this post-office appropriation bill. As has been said by my colleague [Mr. Moon of Tennessee] on the other side of the Chamber, it carries a greater appropriation than any bill of the kind has ever carried in the history of the Government. I see that for the year 1909 the amount is $222,960,892. For 1910 the estimate is put at $233,978,560, and there has been recommended for 1910 $234,534,370. It is true that this is a large sum, but this is now a very large country. The interests and the demands of the people of the United States are such as to demand just such business as is shown by the report of the committee on this appropriation bill. Certainly no one is going to regard these items as extravagance, for there is certainly not an item in all the figures that are presented in this report that shows any extravagance whatever. It costs about this amount of money undoubtedly to do the postal business of the United States so that the people may have the proper interchange of opinion and the knowledge of the matters which they have a right to have in the course of the business operations of the country.

want especially to call attention to the fact that in this bill there is no provision for paying any of the expenses of the railway mail clerks. These clerks have an expense each year of about $152 to the man. Just why they should be expected to bear their own expenses when traveling and away from home in the interest of the United States is not exactly plain. And I, with the gentleman who has just taken his seat, believe there ought to be provision made to pay the expenses of the railway mail clerks. I understand there are about 14,000 of them in the service, and if we were to take what is shown to be their actual annual expenses, the amount appropriated should be $2,128,000. Now, there is not a cent appropriated to pay the expenses of these clerks. I am certainly in favor, and I think the country would indorse it, of the proposition to pay their actual expenses. It is said that it will require a good deal of bookkeeping to find out just what the actual expenses are. It is no trouble to find out what the actual expenses are of clerks in the other departments. Certainly it requires some bookkeeping and requires some attention, but after all there are plenty of persons engaged for this purpose now drawing worthy salaries from the Government, and the Post-Office Department particularly, who could do this. Let these expense accounts be made out as other expense accounts, and sworn to. The railway mail clerks do not get a very large salary. It averages about eleven hundred and fifty dollars a year, and the amount I have mentioned-of $152 a year in expensescomes out of that salary. They necessarily are at this expense when away from their homes. There is not a dollar or a cent of the above-mentioned expense charged up for any of their expenses when at home. Every one of the other traveling postoffice people, as has been suggested-all the superintendents, special agents, and inspectors-have their expenses paid when they are on duty away from home.

Now, these clerks are such important persons that they attend to the details of all of the people's postal business. The people of the United States are more interested in getting their mail promptly and in getting it without mistakes than they are in any other branch of the service, and we all have to depend upon the accuracy and the promptness of the Railway Mail Service. lieve railway mail clerks as a class of men rank as high in their branch of the service as any class of men in all the services of the Government. Many of these men have "long runs" and necessarily are away from home a considerable portion of their

This section of the bill, on page 20, from line 11 to line 16, could be amended so as to include these clerks. I will read that paragraph of the bill as I should like to see it amended:

For actual and necessary expenses of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, and chief clerks. Railway Mail Service, and railway postal clerks while actually traveling on the business of the Post-Office Department and away from their several designated quarters, $2,023,000.

Instead of $23,000, as here specified, it should be the amount I have named. I have added the two millions, which would be the amount calculated for each man at an expense of $152 a year when away from home. I am therefore in favor of this traveling allowance item, which I have mentioned in connection with this bill. The railway postal clerks are certainly entitled with this bill. The railway postal cierks are certainly children to our serious consideration, and I agree with my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Sperry] and indorse every word he has said.

The Railway Mail Service is probably the most nerve-racking occupation in the government service. Those in this service must keep their geography well in mind. They must study well the least the country: they must also locations of all the post-offices in the country; they must also note the changes in the railroad schedules while off duty as well as on duty. Therefore they are proceed by power off duty. Therefore they are practically never off duty. They are expected to dispatch the mail of the business world with accuracy and promptness. Then we might consider the hazard of this great work, as also suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut. The official records of the Post-Office Department, as I have been able to investigate them, give us the figures by which we can authoritatively state the situation in which those men are placed. The records of the Post-Office Department during the last five years do show that 76 clerks have been killed outright. Some of those clerks have been actually cremated in the burning wreck of the railroad cars on which they were traveling in the discharge of their duty. Others have been very greatly tortured, if not cremated, and maimed for life. I have in mind a railway mail clerk who lives in my congressional district, who was actually pinned down under a car for hours before he was released, and he was so seriously injured that he will never again be able to travel on a railroad car as a mail clerk; and out of considera-tion for his excellent services theretofore and the serious nature of his injuries he has been put in the railway mail office in Cincinnati, Ohio, in order that he may not be turned out like an old horse to die.

It is also stated, as suggested by my friend from Connecticut, that 541 clerks of the Railway Mail Service were seriously injured, 2,346 of them were slightly injured, making a grand total of 2,963 railway mail clerks either killed or injured in the discharge of their duty during that period of time. The railway mail clerks have a beneficial association through which they provide for the injured clerks and the families of those who are

I understand also that this organization has dispersed in the course of the charitable operations of that organization over That, of course, came out of their salaries. the Post-Office Department, as I understand, in order to simply reimburse that investment, recommend that the expenses of the railway mail clerks be provided for. In the course of the investigation made by the department it appears that the personal expenses of these men in the course of the necessary travel amount to nearly $2,000,000 annually while away from their homes and terminals in the discharge of duty.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CHANEY. Certainly.
Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to know what number of these 15,000 postal clerks are off duty one-half of the time? large proportion of them I know are; and I want to know if it is not the uniform practice of the department to let them run a week, or the week days of a week, and then give them a lay off for the next eight days. I know it is so in a large number of instances, but I do not know how extensive that is.

Mr. CHANEY. I am not able to answer the gentleman's question as to the extent of it. There is some arrangement of Mr. HEPBURN. I have an impression that a large proportion of these men work less than half the time.

Mr. CHANEY. Well, I think it only operates when these railroad mail clerks have very long runs, where provision was made for them to be off duty for any specific length of time.

The gentleman must be thinking of a regulation which existed several years ago.

Mr. LANDIS. Will my colleague permit a question?
Mr. CHANEY. Certainly.
Mr. LANDIS. Is it not true that during this period that the clerks are off duty, as the gentleman from Iowa suggests, that they put in that time in study of what is known as "the scheme," and that as a matter of fact the duty they perform when they are alleged to be off duty is almost as onerous as when on the train?

Mr. CHANEY. That is actually so.
Mr. LANDIS. I will state in this connection that at one time I had a brother in the Railway Mail Service who had six days off and six days on.

Mr. HEPBURN. Eight days off.

Mr. LANDIS. Six days off and six days on or eight days off and eight days on; and during the period that he was alleged to be off duty he worked continually. As a matter of fact, he worked harder then than when on the train performing the work of a railway mail clerk in distributing the mail.

Mr. SULLOWAY. May I suggest that he worked more than eight hours when out on a run.

Mr. LANDIS. Yes; his term of service while he was on the road was fourteen hours at a stretch.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Almost two days in one. Mr. CHANEY. I think there is no question but that the remarks of these gentlemen fit very well into the speech which I am making

Mr. OVERSTREET. I wish to suggest that this conversation relates to an antiquated state of affairs in the postal service as it formerly existed, and not to modern practices

Mr. CHANEY. It may be said by some one that this proposition amounts to an increase of the salaries of these clerks, but I beg to say that it is in no respect an increase of salary; it is simply an appropriation of money by which they may be able to retain their present salaries. It is, therefore, simply a matter of justice, even-handed justice; for there is no reason why these people should, while serving the Government, pay their own expenses and pay out more than clerks who necessarily travel in the discharge of their respective duties in other departments of the Government. It seems to me that there can be no objection to granting to these valuable servants of the Government the amount of their expenses which they necessarily sustain. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murbock].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, under the control of the Speaker of the House and the enormous power with which he is armed, can the individual Member properly discharge his duties to the Nation?

All important general legislation here may be properly divided into two kinds: General legislation which permanent law, general legislation making appropriations for the current conduct of government. The rate law and the purefood law, for instance, come under the first heading. The annual and permanent appropriations for the navy, the postal service, and other departments under the other.

I desire to confine myself to-day to the limitations of the Member in the matter of legislation making appropriations. There is a minimum of politics in this kind of legislation and there ought to be. Under the present system the responsibility of this legislation is confined largely to the Speaker and his cabinet; that is, the chairmen of the various appropriation committees. The individual Member has very little that is vital to do with it; and under the present rules and practices of the House he can not have.

And yet the matter of appropriations should be the concern of all. The one appalling thing in this Government is the tendency toward extravagance. The consideration of bills which open the doors of the Treasury occupies a major portion of the time of the body. The Members of the House are peculiarly the guardians of the public money. It is the House which originates these bills and first examines those branches of government which are asking for the right to expend. The several appropriation committees have hearings, consider the bill in hand, section by section, and report to the House. The chairman of the committee reporting a bill is the special champion of the reported measure. He feels called upon to protect it from change. He combats amendments and he is usually able to defeat amendments, if out of order, by the power of a rule, and if in order, by the fact that the organization is able to bring quickly to the House an attendance which, by practice, with the committee," which means that those who rush into the Chamber when a crisis has been reached in a contest vote "with the chairman."

It is therefore of prime importance to the mover of an amendment that he win over, not the House, but the chairman, for the chairman will deliver a majority of the House.

The chairmen are loyal to the Speaker. His request is powerful. Few chairmen would resist a suggestion from the Therefore the Member who desired the chairman's favor of an amendment, if it is refused, has one appeal. The appeal is not to the House. It is to the Speaker.

Now, it happens that the average individual who comes to Congress has an idea of service to the Nation. Ordinarily he will run across some item of appropriation which he thinks should be changed. If he will go to the chairman and the Speaker, he may have the change effected. If he goes to the House, it is not at all likely that he will obtain a correction.

And some men will not go to the Speaker or to the chairman. The House is the most representative branch of the democracy. There is presumed to be a measure of equality for initiative action in the body. A fair presentation of any subject to the House was contemplated in the Constitution, a majority to reject or adopt. A petition of a Congressman to the Speaker or to a chairman-that is, a petition in the form of begging a favorwas not. And when a Congressman becomes a petitioner he is surrendering not only his own rights, but the rights of his constituency. Let no one deceive himself with the illusory hope that under a chance call of committees, as at present managed, and after the expiration of an hour, he has the floor in his own right. That is one chance in a lifetime, a chance that does not occur five times in a Congress.

Now, to some concrete cases. In 1907 Congress created an Immigration Commission. It is composed of three Congressmen, three Senators, and three citizens. It has already spent, according to the auditor, the enormous sum of $333,000. This included a trip to Europe by some of the Members, the expenses of the trip, I am informed, being within bounds. There is no limit of time on the life of the commission. It has a large corps of employees, and their expenses are paid, not by specific appropriation, but out of a permanent fund supplied by the payment of a $4 head tax on aliens.

Among the employees of the commission, I am told at the auditor's office, appears the name of Michael Clayton, who is engaged in secret-service work of some kind. He is paid over $28 a day; that is, he has been paid $20 a day compensation-$8 per diem and traveling expenses in addition. His voucher for the month of March, 1908, is for $1,025; that is, $620, compensation; $248, per diem; and $157, traveling expenses. This is our secret-service man and not the President's. Now, I believe this is too high a wage for secret service. I think the majority of men in Congress so believe. Suppose, now, that so believing, I desired, not by supplicating anybody, but through legislation, to attempt to cut down this expenditure and any others like it I might find, how could I reach it? I might introduce a bill repealing a portion of the original law. I might even get my bill on the calendar. And I might then go to the Speaker for recognition to call it up. And that I will not do, because I believe that when I do I am contributing to a denial of representative government. I was sent down here in a representative capacity, not as a petitioner.

Now, for another concrete case. Part of the Michigan Central Railroad runs across a bridge below Niagara which, about thirty years ago, was made by act of Congress a post route. Part of the United States mail between Buffalo and Detroit passes over this bridge. On account of the bridge being expensive the railroad company asked both the United States and Canada for extra compensation. Canada refused this; the United States granted the railroad's demand. H. B. Ledyard, its president, was made a mail messenger, and the Michigan Central has been paid $1,000 a year extra; that is, over and above the regular compensation. In twenty-three years $23,000 has been so paid. A mail messenger is a man who carries the mail. Under no interpretation of the law can mail-messenger service be a railway postal route. I believe this payment is wrong. I believe the great majority here would so believe if they knew of it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. Is the payment for this messenger specifically provided for in the post-office bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all. Mr. MADDEN. Who authorizes it?

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it authorized by the Post-Office Committee or the House?

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, not at all. It is not authorized by either. But suppose I attempted to correct it. I might write an amendment limiting the appropriation in the postal-supply But if a point of order were made, I would be defeated by a ruling from the Chair, as I was when I attempted to have the House order the use of a correct divisor in the weighing of the mails, for the payment of this money to Mr. Ledyard has behind it, as that had, the long-continued practice of the department, and my amendment would be the fatal "change of law" not permitted on an appropriation bill.

Here is another case. We pay $50,000 a year, by statute, for the carriage of the mails across the Eads Bridge, at St. Louis. We began this when this was the only bridge at St. Louis. If we paid for this service at regular rates for weight and car space, we would be paying something like $15,000 a year. Since the passage of this law another bridge, the Merchants', has been built at St. Louis, and it is now owned by the same company which owns the Eads Bridge. Many railroads use it, and we pay in regular rates $13,000 a year for the Merchants' Bridge. Now, $50,000 a year is too great an expenditure for that service on the Eads Bridge by at least $35,000.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The bridge to which the gentleman has been referring is the very octopus that the people of St. Louis complain of; and for that reason I had to ask the House twice or three times for an extension of a charter, which has been granted by Congress, to enable the people of St. Louis to build a third bridge, in order to be relieved of that monopoly

Mr. MURDOCK. I hope, when the third bridge is built, we will not continue to pay $50,000 a year to the Eads Bridge on the theory that it is the only bridge across the Mississippi River. Now, suppose I should attempt to change that by amendment

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield to me for just a suggestion?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I understand that a moment ago the gentleman made a little criticism of a rather high-priced man employed by the Immigration Commission.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me get through with this proposition, and then I shall be glad to return to that subject.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Very well.

Mr. MURDOCK. Suppose I should attempt to change it by an amendment on the postal appropriation bill. A point of order would defeat it. Suppose I introduced a bill changing this bridge pay, succeeded in getting the bill out of committee and in the calendar. In the capacity of a suppliant I might be able to rise in my place and, having made previous arrangements, obtain recognition calling the bill up for consideration, But as I am not on the floor a petitioner, and as I would rise as a Representative or not at all, I would not be recognized "for that purpose."

Coming nearer home, every year the Members of this body sign for their mileage. A receipt is prepared in which, in a printed form, the distance a Member travels is entered. preparation of the entire number of receipts is not more than a preparation of the entire number of receipts is not more than a week's work, if that. The Sergeant-at-Arms' office has a full complement of clerks. But we pay yearly for this service an additional sum of $500. This, beside millions which are appropriated, may seem trivial. It could not be given very serious consideration by the House, I know. But suppose I desired to do away with it. Having found it and identified it, I would have the right to attack it. But I would meet the opposition of a powerful chairman, the indifference of the House, or its inclination to "vote with the chairman." And in the end I would meetly have my trouble for my pains. It would be infinitely clination to "vote with the chairman." And in the end I would merely have my trouble for my pains. It would be infinitely more effective for me to prefer my objection to the item to the chairman as a petition. But I am not a petitioner.

No Member here ought to be a suppliant. His constituency's part in representative government is diminished by just so much when he becomes one.

Through the power of recognition, through the appointment of committees, and through the right of reference and his management of procedure, the Speaker has the control here. He exercises it through the chairmen. Of chairmen, loyalty to the Speaker is expected. Of Members, loyalty to the chairmen is expected. The control runs, not upward from the Members to the Speaker; it runs downward from the Speaker to the chairmen. These represent. The others petition. Now, the right of petition is a sacred one which I greatly value. But the right of representation is another matter. One carries a request. other carries action in response to request. We as Representa-tives are supposed not to ask, but to act.

And now I challenge any Member of this body who is not a chairman of an appropriation committee to secure a correction, through congressional action, in these four items I cited, over the opposition of the Speaker or without his consent or that of any of the chairmen. So far as I know, these items have not been presented before to Congress. The field is open. The trial can be made by amendments and by change of law. But there can be no successful issue of the trial unless the chairman of a committee consents in the case of the amendments, and unless the Speaker agrees to recognition in case of change of law. If no one will attempt it, I will myself later, but with no hope of

Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I understood the gentleman's statement was that the immigration commission employed a man at $20 a day and expenses for a short time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me give it to the gentleman correctly. They have paid $20 a day compensation, $8 per diem, and traveling expenses beside. I got hold of only one voucher, and I went through it carefully; it was for the month of March, 1908. It showed that this man had been paid $620 compensation for the month, $248 per diem, and $157 traveling expenses in addi-

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman's statement, I assume, is substantially correct. We did employ a high-priced man for a short time. We took him from where he was having a salary nearly, if not quite, as large as that, and two days after he left he was receiving the same salary. As a result of his work the entire Chinese inspection board from the southern boundary of California was removed and a new set appointed. The result has been that the steamer that has been bringing to the little Mexican port south of the California border 50 Chinamen a week, to be smuggled into our territory, now brings 6 7, and the Chinese are being smuggled in another way, which we are also onto. By using that man we have been able to make reforms, which will be reported to the House, saving as much as $100,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman contend that any member of the Secret Service is worth a wage of $1,000 a month?

Mr. BENNET of New York. He is worth as much to this Government, or any other, as he is worth to the outside public.
Mr. MURDOCK. Then why did not you give him $1,000 per month? Why did you give him the compensation of $20, and on top of that an extra per diem of $8, which I think is extravagant, and then on top of that traveling expenses?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Because that is the sum, or the rate of compensation, that he was drawing from private people, and is getting from the private people now, and doing the same kind of work. Where a man draws that compensation for doing that kind of work for private people, it is our business to pay him the same.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NORRIS. In the private service in which this man was engaged was his compensation paid in that way?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It amounts up to more than that. Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but does he get a big salary and then a per diem, and then expenses besides?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Of that I am not advised. I know that within two days after he left us he went into new service where the compensation was greater.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then detectives are paid a great deal more than I thought they were. Now, the chief secret service of the United States is in the Post-Office Department, and I venture the assertion that the gentleman can not find a parallel case to that, and I doubt very much whether he can find, save at the head of the Pinkertons or at the head of the bureau, any man receiving a salary equal to that.

Mr. BENNET of New York. This man was as good as the chief of any agency.

Mr. MURDOCK. He ought to have been better.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I do not know but that he was. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is within the control of the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Tennessee

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the

mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman ten minutes of my time.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is his inference, or if he means to convey to the committee the idea that the chairman of the committee would be without influence in the House if appointed otherwise than by the Speaker? | none.

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all; and none of the proposed rules that I have seen would tend to tear down the individual in this One of the purposes of a change of rules is to build

Mr. OLMSTED. Does not the gentleman think that the influence of the chairman results from the fact that he has been for a long time on the committee and is more familiar with the subject-matter of the bill, and is so recognized by the other Members on the floor?

Mr. MURDOCK. In part; but superimposed upon that is also the arbitrary power that comes through the processes which I have been explaining.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; if you do not take up too much of my time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman says that he would not go to the Speaker or the chairman of a committee for fear he might thereby regard himself as a petitioner. Would he regard it in that light if he were to familiarize the chairman of the committee with the facts of the necessity of a public building in his district? Would that be a petition, or would it be a performance of his duty as a Member of the House?

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all. In case of a contest, the only way to present any proposition is to present it in order, and under the rules, whatever the rules may be; and a Member ought to have the right, and it ought to be his sole privilege, to reach any proposition upon which there is a contest in order, and without superimposing upon the one duty the other private duty of personal appeal.

I know there are many Members here who believe in the present rules and their administration. I ask any one of these not a chairman of an appropriation committee to take his choice of any one of the items and attempt to make a change without asking permission. He may change his mind about the rules before he is through. Disraeli said the way to learn the rules of the House of Commons was by breaking them. The way to come to a full realization of the autocratic control of legislative power in the House of Representatives is to attempt a vital change without first asking the consent of the leadership.

There are several ways to break up the present system. If the House should select its own committees, and make the call of committees frequent and compulsory, the whole nature of the situation would change. The Speaker would lose power and the Member would have restored to him a measure of his original initiative. With a calendar under the control of the House, the Speaker would not have his present control over reported bills, and the individual Member would have occasionally the right of consideration for his reported measures without asking anybody's consent but the majority's. And the day will come when no Speaker will have the right to pass upon the purpose of a Member's request for recognition when the Member is in order, and another day will see open committee meetings. was intended that this House should be the most characteristically representative branch of this representative Government. It can not be that with the concentration of control in the hands of a few men. A challenge of that control brings, and has brought at this session, a measure of relaxation in absolutism. A successful attack upon that control will lead to actual representation in fact. It is a consummation devoutly to be wished, and as popular desire in this country does ultimately prevail, it is a consummation that is inevitable. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if by any rule that could be created the power of recognition could be taken away from the Speaker?

Mr. MURDOCK. I think that the House could limit the power of recognition in the Speaker.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman would not assume to say that the Speaker would not have the right to designate either of two men who rose at the same time asking for recognition.

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly not; and in no legislative body in the world can the Speaker be prevented from choosing between two men who rise simultaneously.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I now yield one hour to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, before starting in my argument, in order that I may not take up unnecessarily the time of the House, I ask permission now to revise and extend my remarks, and to print as an appendix to the same certain documents, letters, and other data to which I propose to refer and which I do not desire to read in full.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the building of a canal across the American Isthmus has occupied the attention of the world for four hundred years. While yet the sailors who crossed the sea with Columbus in his caravels were living and in all the vigor of mature manhood, a Spanish engineer drew the plans for an artificial waterway across the Isthmus and submitted them to the King of Spain. From that time to this the building of the Isthmian Canal has been the absorbing question in that part of the western world. On account of this undertaking, thousands of lives have been sacrificed, millions of treasure have been squandered and lost, and the dream of the centuries has not yet been realized.

In 1881 the French actually commenced the building of the canal. Flushed with his success in building the Suez Canal, the great French engineer, De Lesseps, as the head of the French company, entered enthusiastically upon the work. For seven years the work proceeded, and then the crash came and the scandals that astounded the world. In attempting to build the canal a tremendous sum of money had been expended. The judicial proceedings following the failure of the first French company disclose an orgy of corruption such as the world had never seen before. One hundred senators and deputies were charged with taking bribes. Ten senators were actually brought to trial, and De Lesseps himself was sentenced to five years in prison. The great engineer M. Eiffel was sentenced to two years in prison. Some capitalists committed suicide; others became extles from France.

The French company failed on account of the graft which permeated it. Every person in France who had anything to sell, when no other purchaser could be found, sold it to the French company, and the officers of the company divided the graft among themselves. They built a house on the Isthmus of Panama for the director-general at an alleged cost of $100,000. They built for him a summer home at La Boca, and the records show it cost $150,000 to build it.

They fixed his salary at $50,000 per year and then gave him an extra allowance of $50 a day. Thousands of snow shovels were sold to the company and taken to the Isthmus of Panama for the purpose of shoveling snow off the right of way of the canal. They sent to the Isthmus 15,000 kerosene torches to be used in celebrating the completion of the canal. They set up a great dredge costing many thousands of dollars in the Culebra cut, to be used in dredging the cut, when the canal was sufficiently completed to admit water from the sea to that part of the canal. You can yet see in the jungles across the Isthmus great steel steamships brought from France, put together along the route of the canal, waiting now for the completion of the canal.

The organization of the New Panama Canal Company was effected in France on the 21st day of October, 1893, or perhaps it was actually organized a little later than that. This company was organized with a capital of $13,000,000, largely contributed by penalized stockholders. Distinguished French citizens who had stolen money from the first company were compelled to disgorge and to use the money so stolen in the purchase of stock in the new company. The company in its operations may have expended its capital; they may have expended something in addition to that. How much they expended in addition to their capital can not be ascertained in this country at the present time from reliable data. The New Panama Company continued its operations until the date of the conveyance to the United States on the 23d day of April, 1904.

The expenditures made by the two French canal companies startled the world. The first company actually expended on the canal $201,505,000. The amount expended by the new company can not be ascertained. It is hardly fair to call the $13,000,000 contributed principally by penalized stockholders an additional expenditure, even if it was all paid in.

We have been operating on the Canal Zone now a little over four years, and we have appropriated to date on account of this enterprise $170,964,468.58. The urgent deficiency estimate just made by our Canal Commission shows that, in addition to the above enormous appropriation, it will take $5,458,000 to carry on the work on the canal to June 30, 1909, the end of this fiscal year. In other words, on the 30th day of June of this year we will have expended on the canal $176,422,468.58. The expenditures made by the French in this enterprise startled the world, but we are face to face now with the fact that, assuming the French company got the $40,000,000 we paid for it, we have expended now, in a little over four years, as much money as both the French companies expended in twenty-three years, and we have not lowered the bed of the canal an inch from where the French left it.

At the end of this fiscal year we will have expended on this canal more money than our engineers advised us, when the canal rights were purchased from the French, would be required to complete the entire work, and no engineer is courageous enough now to say how much it will cost to build this canal. It has been earnestly insisted that $500,000,000 will be required for the purpose of completing the work, and the junior Senator from Illinois, apparently at the suggestion of the administration, has introduced in the Senate a bill providing for a bond issue of $500,000,000 for that purpose.

We entered upon the building of the canal with splendid enthusiasm. We believed we were about to realize the dream of centuries by joining the two great oceans of the world. We yielded to the romance of the situation. From far-off Spanish-American lands there came the lure of lost gold mines and buried gold. But the romance connected with operating among groves of mango trees and palm trees under southern skies is wearing off, and we are face to face with the real problems of canal construction. After spending this enormous sum, we are just beginning to realize that we have not yet been able to ascertain whether we propose to build a lock canal or a sealevel canal. We are just beginning to realize that we have but commenced the most stupendous task ever undertaken by any nation in the history of the world.

Our national honor is committed, however, to the building of this canal. It is impossible to turn back, even if we wanted to do so. If we find it impossible to build a lock canal at this point, we can build a sea-level canal. If we find it impossible to build even a sea-level canal at this point, there are other routes. [Applause.]

We propose to build this canal, but we are beginning to realize that we can complete it only at a cost that will astound the nations of the world.

If we are to carry this project through to a successful conclusion, we must avoid the graft which destroyed the French companies. It is not the part of wise statesmanship to dispose of resolutions asking for an investigation of any phase of the canal question with the sweeping and absolutely unsupported official declaration that there is nothing to investigate. It is not the part of sound statesmanship and true patriotism to attempt to revive the obsolete common-law remedies of two hundred years ago and to employ all the tremendous agencies of the Government in attempting to crush newspapers which have had the courage to call attention to a questionable transaction in connection with the canal. Public opinion even in Germany would not permit the German Emperor to do there at the present time what the President of the United States is trying to do here. Before I get through this afternoon I expect to demonstrate that there are things connected with our canal operations which need investigation-important matters affecting this administration and the next administration. [Applause on the Democratic side. 1

It is to be regretted that the time of the President of the United States has been so much taken up with outdoor sports and among the pleasures of the lighter literature. He knows nothing of the drudgery, physical or mental, that is required to arrive at matters of fundamental importance.

Declarations of alleged facts that come with so much assurance and such frequency from the White House are not always entitled to the weight we would like to give to communications from the Chief Executive of the Nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

His statements with reference to Panama Canal matters are sometimes particularly inaccurate. To illustrate, I call attention to his special message of December 17, 1906, concerning the Panama Canal, sent to Congress soon after the President's return from his brief visit to the Isthmus in that year.

In this message, among other statements, he makes the following:

On the top notch of the Culebra cut the prism is as wide as it will be; all told, the canal bed at this point has now been sunk about 200 feet below what it originally was. It will have to be sunk about 130 feet farther.

The extract I have read contains three misstatements of fact. It could not contain more, for the simple reason that it contains only three statements of alleged fact. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] In the first place, on the top notch of the Culebra cut the prism was not as wide then, and is not as wide now, as it will be necessary to make it. Secondly, the canal bed at this point at that time had not been lowered an inch, and it has not until a recent date been lowered an inch, at any point in the Culebra cut from the place where the French left it. Thirdly, it will not be necessary to sink the prism here 130 feet farther, even if we build a sea-level canal. [Applause.]

I simply mention this to show that the frequent hastily formed conclusions and ill-considered statements of the President are not always entitled to the respect we would like to give to the utterances of the Chief Executive of this great Nation.

When we are confronted with such possibilities as to the legitimate expenditure of public funds in this enterprise, we ought to carefully avoid the pitfalls and the graft which contributed to the defeat of the French. In a great national enterprise of this kind, involving large appropriations, we ought to start out by condemning in the strongest terms any effort to sell machinery, ships, or other supplies to the Government simply because some individual or company wants to get rid of them. It will take enough money to buy the things we actually need. I want to call attention to the fact that we have already started in the direction of the rocks upon which the French companies were wrecked.

The sundry civil appropriation act of May 27 last carried $1,550,000 for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of War to purchase two steamships for the Panama Railroad Company. This item was not in the bill when it left the House. carefully searched the estimates for this fiscal year, and it appears that the Panama Canal Commission did not even ask for these ships. The commission asked for $122,500 for floating equipment. They got over a million and a half dollars for the The commission asked for $122,500 for floating purpose of buying something they had not asked for, did not expect, and did not need. A careful examination of this item in the bill discloses the fact that it is so worded as to apply to only Under this appropriation it was possible to buy only two certain definite ships in all the world, the Shawmut and the Tremont. The Secretary of War was allowed absolutely no option. He was compelled by this clause in the law to buy these ships and to buy no others. The law required the Secretary to buy ships of not less than 9,000 gross registered tonnage, and of American registry. There are only three ships in the American merchant navy having over 9,000 gross registered tonnage and less than 10,786 gross registered tonnage. Two of these vessels are the ships owned by the Boston Steamship Company—the ships that were actually purchased. The third one is the steamship Samland, of the Red Star Line, owned by the International Mercantile Marine Company, of New Jersey This vessel was not for sale, and even if it had been that fact would not have relieved the situation.

The law required the Secretary to buy two ships of this character, and the Boston Steamship Company were in a position to refuse to sell him either of their ships unless he bought both. The Tremont and the Shawmut were out of commission and tied up at the wharf in Seattle and were for sale. The Secretary bought them. He could do nothing else. If this item in the sundry civil bill had required the Secretary to buy ships of 5,000 gross registered tonnage and upward, he would have had 25 or 30 vessels owned by different companies to select from. If the act had required him to buy vessels of 2,500 tons and upward, vessels of the Finance and Advance type, he would have had over 80 vessels to select from. The announced policy of the commission has always been to purchase vessels of 6,000 gross registered tonnage and under that, and no vessel in the service owned by the railroad company is of a larger type than this. In fact, the best service seems to be obtained by the use of 2,500-ton vessels. Not long ago I made a trip to the Isthmus of Panama on the Colon, one of the ships purchased from the Ward Line, having a gross registered tonnage of a little less than 6,000, and it seemed to me this vessel had considerable difficulty following the winding channel into the harbor of Colon, and I was told that frequently when the wind was blowing from the north it was impossible for vessels even of this type to enter the harbor.

This expenditure for ships we do not want will eventually, in the near future, make necessary large appropriations for the purpose of dredging the harbor at Colon in order to enable them to enter. Our shipments of engines and heavy machinery to the Canal Zone ought not to be as heavy in the future as they have been heretofore. The vessels in commission are ample for the purpose of carrying men and supplies to the Isthmus. The expenditure of this money was absolutely unwarranted.

It may be interesting to know how this provision got in the bill. On the 28th day of January, 1908, the senior Senator from Massachusetts proposed an amendment to the sundry civil bill, and introduced the same in accordance with the rules of the Senate providing for the appropriation of $1,600,000 for this purpose, specifying that the vessels so purchased must be vessels of at least 9,000 gross registered tonnage. On the 28th day of April, 1908, the same Senator again introduced an amendment, differently worded, but having in view the same object. When the bill finally passed, through the efforts of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, it contained the clause to which I call attention, and so we are face to face, in the circumstances surrounding this appropriation, with the fact that the Canal Commission did not want and did not need the ships, but the constituents of the senior Senator from Massachusetts wanted to sell them, and therefore this enormous sum has been added to the Panama Canal expenditures.

In our merchant marine there are only the three steamships I have mentioned with a gross registered tonnage of between 9,000 and 10,786. The Philadelphia comes next with a registered tonnage of 10,786. Then comes the New York with a registered tonnage of 10,798. It would not be possible to buy these two ships for the amount appropriated, even if they were for sale, and there are at present in our merchant marine only seven vessels larger than the New York. It would not of course be possible to buy any two of them for the amount appropriated in this bill. These two vessels, out of commission—they were of no use whatever to their owners—tied up at the wharf at Seattle, were delivered to the Government on the first day of this month at Seattle. The statement made by the Isthmian Canal Commission recently is that they will probably require considerable repairs and changes in order to make them serviceable. These necessary repairs and changes will, in all probability, make necessary a larger appropriation than the total amount requested by the commission for floating equipment.

The somewhat astonishing statement is made by the Isthmian Canal Commission that the company selling them would not undertake the risk of bringing these abandoned ships around to New York unless the Government would agree to pay to the company the sum of $56,000 for taking the rick.

company the sum of $56,000 for taking the risk.

For some weeks the secret agencies of the Government have been at work investigating the senior Senator from South Carolina. They have succeeded in discovering that he used his frank inadvertently in private correspondence, and so deprived the Government of revenues to the amount of 2 cents, and the matter was considered important enough to be embodied in a special message from the President to Congress. The senior Senator from Massachusetts, I believe, is still invited to White House dinners, is the President's friend and adviser and the Cabinet maker for the incoming President. I have not heard of any secret-service agents disturbing the senior Senator from Massachusetts, and yet he is, of record, directly, individually, and solely responsible for the fact that on the 1st day of January of this year, for the purposes I have named, there was taken out of the Treasury of the United States over $1,000,000.

We have embarked now upon the stormy seas of Central American politics. Our flag is floating now on the Isthmus of Panama. It seems that the Constitution does not always follow the flag. In fact, it has not followed it at all in its recent ramblings, but a certain class of New York City financiers follow it and flock around it like vultures wherever it goes. They have followed it to the Isthmus of Panama and have already, under its sheltering folds, pounced down upon that deformed the country. [Applicated] defenseless little country. [Applause.]

They have taken everything in this country that is not nailed down, and now they have commenced their operations on the Isthmus of Panama. [Applause.]

I am making this speech for the purpose, among other things, of serving notice on certain gentlemen in New York City and elsewhere that I am not far from the right track. [Applause.]

It becomes necessary now to know something about Central American politics, and I desire to introduce to the country Señor Don Jose Domingo de Obaldia. [Laughter.] It is important to know something about the career of this interesting Spanish-American statesman.

He was born in David, Panama, in 1845. William Nelson Cromwell became attorney for the railroad company about the year 1904, and three or four years later he became general counsel in the United States and in Spanish-American countries for the new French Panama Canal Company. About the time of his latter employment he met Obaldia, and they have been closely and inscensably connected in canal matters.

have been closely and inseparably connected in canal matters ever since. Without Obaldia, Cromwell's career would have been impossible. Without Cromwell, Obaldia would have been impossible. Obaldia represents as no other Spanish-American statesman in his generation all that is corrupt in Spanish-American politics. Cromwell represents and stands for all that is most strongly to be condemned in present New York City financial methods. [Applause.]

His specialty is revolutions and canals. It is not possible now to say just what the connection of Cromwell was with the recent bloodless revolution in Panama, and with the equally necessary prior revolution in Colombia, which cost that country thousands of lives and millions of treasure.

In his examination before the Senate investigating committee he refused to reveal his connection with these events, upon the theory that he could not do so without betraying the confidence busters and buccaneers come down, arm in arm, through ten years of bloodshed and bribery and corruption and occupy today the center of the stage, high in the confidence of the present administration and the charge high in the confidence of the present his clients had reposed in him. And so these two modern filiadministration and the chosen advisers of the incoming President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I propose now to reveal the connection of these two gentlemen and of other gentlemen, whom I shall name hereafter, with a most atrocious attempt to ruin and despoil the little Republic of Panama and indirectly to rob the Treasury of the United States. I expect, as I go along, to submit the evidence sustaining what I propose to say.

The active public career of Obaldia commenced in 1903. It was necessary at that time, in order to carry out the plans of Cromwell, that Obaldia be elected to the Colombian Senate, and he was elected as a senator from the province of Panama to the Colombian legislature. The franchise of the New Panama Canal Company was about to expire and the Hay-Herran treaty was pending. There is nothing materially different in the Hay Herran treaty from the convention that afterwards was entered into with the new Republic of Panama. The contemplated expenditure of money on our part was about the same. But the Hay-Herran treaty was defeated, principally because Colombia did not want to act through Cromwell as its fiscal agent, and Cromwell would not permit any part of the forty millions we were willing to pay the French canal company to go to the Republic of Colombia. The Colombian Congress were demanding, inasmuch as the franchise granted to the canal company expired in less than a year, and inasmuch as at that time the entire French holdings on the Isthmus would be forfeited to Colombia, that she, Colombia, ought to be permitted to collect from the canal company some portion of the $40,000,000 we proposed to pay. It is interesting to note in this connection that among all the members of the Senate of Colombia, Obaldia was the only man who was willing to betray his country.

He was the only senator who supported in the Colombian Senate the Hay-Herran treaty, the only senator who denied to his country the right to demand any money from the new French Panama Canal Company in return for the $40,000,000 worth of property that would, in less than twelve months, belong absolutely to Colombia. As soon as the treaty was defeated he resigned his place in the Colombian Senate. It is not a difficult matter for New York financiers of the Cromwell type to influence Spanish-American presidents, and immediately after the resignation of Obaldia from his position as a member of the Colombian Senate, President Marroquin, of Colombia, was persuaded to appoint him governor of the Province of Panama, and he was there— Johnny on the spot-in command of the armies of Panama, in charge of the arsenals, the armories, and the fortresses when the revolution of Cromwell occurred. [Applause.]
The Colombian Congress adjourned October 31, 1903, without confirming the Hay-Herran treaty. On November 2 the Nash-ville arrived at Colon ready to land a strong force of marines. November 3 was a red-letter day in the history of American diplomacy. On that day, the so-called "revolution" in Panama was pulled off. At 3.40 o'clock on the afternoon of November 3, the United States consul at Panama received from Mr. Loomis, the Assistant Secretary of State, the following telegram:

We are informed there has been an uprising on the Isthmus. Keep the department informed of everything without delay.

The consul of the United States at Panama immediately re-

The uprising has not occurred yet. It is announced that it will take place this evening.

[Laughter.]

And at 9.50 o'clock on the evening of November 3 the Department of State received a telegram from our representative in Panama, which read:

The revolt took place this evening at 6. There has been no bloodshed.

[Laughter and applause.]

We recognized the independence of Panama at once, and entered into a convention with the new Republic, forever guaranteeing the independence of the Republic of Panama.

But the usefulness of Obaldia did not end there. After spending about two weeks quite comfortably in prison, he was promoted to the position of Second Vice-President of Panama, and soon afterwards, on the advice of Mr. Cromwell, was made the minister from the Republic of Panama to the United States, succeeding Bunau-Varilla. During the recent visit of Doctor Amador, until last October President of Panama, to the United States and to Europe. Obaldia returned to Panama and acted as President of the Republic. On July 12, 1908, through the efforts of William Nelson Cromwell, ably assisted by Secretary Taft and the present administration, Obaldia was forced as President upon the Republic of Panama. It was absolutely necessary to do this in order to make possible the gigantic schemes for robbing and despoiling the Republic of Panama, and indirectly the Treasury of the United States, which I propose now to disclose.

But before proceeding with the discussion of that phase of the question it becomes necessary to get better acquainted with William Nelson Cromwell, and I will try to discuss that gentleman without libeling the Government of the United States, if it is possible to do so.

Mr. Cromwell was general counsel for the New Panama Canal Company in its relations with Colombia. After the independence of Panama he was the general counsel of the same company in its relations with Panama. He was in 1893 and is at the present time general counsel for the New Panama Canal Company in its relations with the United States. During a large portion of the last ten years, and at the present time, he was also of counsel for Mr. Harriman and his transcontinental railroads. How it is possible for a conscientious attorney to represent these conflicting interests is not apparent to an average lawyer like myself. [Applause.] He is also general counsel for the Panama Republic, and has held that position from the beginning of the career of the Panama Republic. He has been counsel for the Panama Railroad from about 1893 to the present time. He was counsel for the railroad company when the new French canal company owned over 68,000 of the 70,000 shares of that company. He is counsel now for the Panama Railroad Company, when the United States Government owns every one of the shares. He is also one of the directors of the Panama Railroad Company and Steamship Line.

These positions make him, as a matter of fact, an official of the United States Government. He acts as the fiscal agent of the Panama Republic. In 1899 and 1900 he held a power of attorney for the New Panama Canal Company to sell all the holdings of that company to any purchaser he might select for any sum he might be able to get. Immediately after obtaining this authority he started to organize an American syndicate to exploit the canal properties, the capital stock of the syndicate to be $5,000,000. But about that time he succeeded in interesting prominent American politicians in his canal and in diverting attention from the Nicaragua project; and after having easily succeeded in getting $3,000,000 out of the $5,000,000 subscribed, he abandoned that project and commenced an attempt to sell to the United States Government for $109,000,000. In an hour he dropped in price from $109,000,000 to $40,000,000, and the deal went through on that basis.

I propose hereafter to discuss the question as to how much of this $40,000,000 ever reached the creditors and the shareholders of the French companies. [Applause.]

As a result of the purchase of the canal properties, the United States Government acquired nearly 69,000 shares of the Panama Railroad Company, and Mr. Cromwell, under the new ownership of the company, continued as general counsel of the company and as a director of the company, thereby becoming, in fact, one of the attorneys for the United States Government and an official of the Government.

This advisory capacity to the Government of the United States did not interrupt his activities as attorney for the new French canal company. A year after the $40,000,000 had been apparently paid to the French companies, we find him as attorney for the new canal company, prosecuting a claim against the Government of the United States for $2,200,000 more, which he claimed the company had expended upon their properties after the contract to sell was made with the United States, and before the money was actually paid by the United States. In the time which elapsed after the contract was made to sell and deliver the canal properties for $40,000,000 to the United States and the time the delivery was made, we find that, under his administration of affairs, the French company sweated the properties—making no repairs except what were absolutely necessary—permitting the steamships owned by the company to fall into a condition of bad repair, in order to be able to pay on the canal shares the largest dividend ever paid.

During this interval, under his administration and control of the railroad properties, the railroad paid to the French canal company $100,000 more than it earned. During this interval, while these tremendous dividends were being paid, the French company sold bonds from its treasury to make necessary repairs on the ships of the company. In other words, after the contract to sell was made to the United States Government and before the delivery was made, through the manipulations of Mr. Cromwell, the French canal company was permitted to steal from the United States Government a million dollars or so, and tried to steal more than that. After the transfer was actually made and after he had become an officer in fact of the United States he became a party to an attempt to collect from the United States Government a fraudulent claim on the part of the canal company of $2,200,000.

It is not readily apparent to the honest lawyer devoted to the ethics of his profession how an attorney making any sort of claims to ordinary common honesty and decency could undertake these various matters. [Applause.]

And through all the career I have described Mr. Cromwell has remained the trusted adviser of Secretary Taft and of the administration in all matters pertaining to the Isthmian Canal.

At his request John F. Wallace was appointed general super-intendent of the Panama Railroad. On his advice and through his efforts that great engineer was humiliated and compelled to resign his positions on the Isthmus of Panama. Under his advice and through his efforts we bought the outstanding shares of the Panama Railroad Company, paying for some of them, according to his own statements, two or three times as much as shares in this railroad company had ever brought on any market.

He is the gentleman who keeps the minutes of the meetings of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad Company, and writes them up at his leisure and to suit himself after the adjournment of the board. He procured the appointment of his confidential clerk, Roger L. Farnham, as a member of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad. He owns 22 per cent of the shares in the ice plant and electric light plant upon the Isthmus of Panama. All interests in Panama look upon him as a friend at court. Through his influence his confidential clerk, Roger L. Farnham, was sent abroad on a commission, having for its object the expenditure of millions of dollars for the purchase of steamships for the Panama Railroad service. The sworn officers of the Government were for some reason disqualified for this service. And he also, in the United States, while Obaldia was here, acted as his general counsel.

I have stated only some of the functions this versatile attorney exercises in connection with our canal operations on the Isthmus of Panama, but I have stated enough to indicate the important connection of this gentleman with the present administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is not hard to explain why all the agencies of the Government are now being used in an attempt to indict certain newspapers for saying unkind things about Mr. Cromwell and some others. I will show before I get through this afternoon that Mr. Cromwell and some others, who seem to be peculiarly sensitive to newspaper criticism, are especially deserving of it. [Applause.]

Roger L. Farnham, the confidential clerk in the office of William Nelson Cromwell, was drawing two years ago only $3,500 per year. His usefulness has increased to such an extent that if he is not now worth several million dollars, he soon will be.

Another gentleman I expect to mention later is so well known and has been so prominent in the public eye that it is not necessary to introduce him at the present time. The situation on the Isthmus of Panama can not be understood without some information as to the method of conducting the Panama Railroad properties and the steamships owned by that company.

We own every share of the 70,000 shares of this railroad company. It is a New York corporation, supposed to be operated under the laws of that State. The charter of the organization and the law of the State of New York require that its directors be also shareholders in the organization. There are 13 directors, but every share of stock is locked up in the vaults of the Treasury building here in Washington, under direct control of the Secretary of War. In order to apparently comply with the law, each director is required to purchase a share of stock, upon which he pays $10. He is then required to deposit his share of stock with the Secretary of War as security for the other $90 due on the stock. If it becomes necessary to remove a director, the position taken is that the Secretary of War can immediately foreclose on the share so deposited for the deferred payment. Inasmuch as a director must be a shareholder, he can be in this way, if it becomes necessary, removed from the board without a moment's notice.

The deferred payments on the stock due from the directors were due the moment the stock was deposited to secure it. The theory is that the directors manage and control the railroad. In this way this Government studiously avoids the position of being the owner of the busiest railroad in all the world and the owner and operator of a line of steamships.

Stockholders' meetings, provided for in the charter, are held in an office in New York convenient to the office of William Nelson Cromwell. The Secretary of War appears at these meetings as the owner of every share of the 70,000 shares of stock except 13 shares, and these nominally stand in the names of the 13 directors of the railroad. Inasmuch as Mr. Cromwell writes up the minutes of both the stockholders' meetings and the directors' meetings after the meetings and when it is convenient for him to do so, what transpires at those meetings depends largely upon the accuracy of the memory of Mr. Cromwell. [Laughter and applause.] The directors' meetings are held in the same place.

Every member of the Isthmian Canal Commission is required to be also a director of the railroad and make a $10 deposit on one share of stock. This disposes of seven of these places. There are six others to be filled. It goes without saying that William Nelson Cromwell is one of the six. His clerk and confidential secretary, Roger L. Farnham, is another, of course, and the interesting brotherly alliance between Mr. Cromwell and Señor Don Jose Domingo de Obaldia also continues, and our old friend Obaldia is a member also of the railroad com-mission. [Laughter.] Mr. E. A. Drake, who is at present, I think, superintendent of the railroad on the Isthmus, is, or was until recently, another director. None of these four are members of the Isthmian Canal Commission. It is necessary that there be the closest relations of trust and confidence between the Secretary of War and the directors of this railroad.

I will have occasion later on to refer again to Cromwell,

Farnham, Obaldia, and Drake. [Applause.]

A year or two after the independence of Panama, the officials of that little Republic commenced to absorb ideas of patriotism peculiarly distasteful to Mr. Cromwell. They commenced to proceed upon the theory that the Republic they had helped to create really had some claims for existence and was destined to become of some importance in the western world. they commenced to develop these ideas of civic duty and honesty, Mr. Cromwell determined to displace Doctor Amador and the other leaders of the Constitutional party in Panama and to put in as president some more pliant personage, less devoted to high ideals, and of course in such an emergency as that his attention was directed to his old friend and ally, Don Jose Domingo de Obaldia. Obaldia was a man after Cromwell's own heart; and so it was determined that Obaldia should abandon his very pleasant position in the city of Washington and become the president of the Republic of Panama. Cromwell and his friends had developed certain methods for despoiling and robbing that little country, and they did not propose to be interrupted in any way by the awakened public patriotism and honesty of Doctor Amador and his friends. [Laughter and applause.]

Obaldia was nominated for President by a very small and unimportant faction of the Constitutional party in Panama. There was no Liberal party at that time. In the enthusiasm following the independence of Panama, both parties had united. Obaldia had rough sailing. He received but little encouragement. Mr. Arias was the friend of the administration and the candidate of the Constitutional party. He had held an important position in the cabinet of President Amador and also entertained similar ideas with Doctor Amador, and was devoted to the same ideals as to his duty to his country. Amador had been requested to agree to certain plans determined upon by Cromwell for the spoliation of Panama. He had refused his official sanction, and it was well known on the Isthmus of Panama that Arias would also decline to be a tool in the hands of any man for the ruin of his country.

The campaign occurred on the Isthmus of Panama last summer, while this country was in the throes of the great battle for the Presidency. It attracted but little attention here. Just about the time Mr. Taft's campaign for the Presidency really opened up in earnest in this country, he left for Panama. He arrived on the Isthmus of Panama May 6 and left there May 18. His absence from the United States at that critical time in his career excited considerable comment in this country. The object of his visit to Panama does not appear of recordapparently at that time it was absolutely unnecessary. He did nothing on the Isthmus of Panama except to openly push the candidacy of Obaldia for the Presidency. His visit was regarded in that light by the citizens of Panama, and I have here a number of clippings from newspapers on the Isthmus of Pan-ama bearing out this theory.

On the 11th day of May, 1908, the Panama Star and Herald commented editorially upon Mr. Taft's visit, and intimated that he was there in connection with the political situation. here a number of clippings on this subject from Panamanian newspapers, showing almost conclusively that Mr. Taft was on the Isthmus of Panama in the interest of Obaldia. I will insert a number of them in the appendix to my speech.

The election for President of Panama occurred on the 12th day of July, 1908. On the 28th day of June, 1908, the battle ship New Hampshire and the battle ship Idaho arrived at Colon. Over a thousand marines were soon afterwards landed. The Tivoli Hotel was filled with United States Army officers, registered as civilians. On the 18th day of May Secretary Taft notified President Amador of the intention of the United States to place marines at the polls and to conduct the election for the citizens of Panama. I will publish extracts from this letter in the appendix to my speech. The proposition to President Amador was to station two Americans at every poll. This, of course, meant two American soldiers or marines: An American soldier or an American marine commands as much respect on the Isthmus of Panama as the average New York or Chicago policeman commands in the slum districts of those cities. It is no trouble to get men to vote in some wards in our cities as the police dictate. American marines stationed at every polling place in the Republic of Panama, every one of them for Obaldia, would mean, of course, the election of Obaldia.

Mr. Squires, the American minister to Panama, was openly for Arias. After the return of Mr. Taft to the United States, Mr. Squires was required to come to Washington. He went back to Panama openly for Obaldia. His visit to Washington at that time was made necessary by no other fact than the fact that it was necessary to have him become openly an adherent of Obaldia.

There is contained in the letter from Secretary Taft to Doctor Amador a very thinly veiled threat to seize the Republic of Panama if Obaldia was not elected. In order to prevent this, Arias withdrew on the 4th day of July last, just eight days before the election. I have secured a copy of his letter of withdrawal, and I will publish it in full in the appendix to my speech. He withdrew from the race on account of the interference of Secretary Taft in the elections in Panama. This left Obaldia with no opponent at all. A very small vote was cast at the elections. Obaldia was elected, and in October, 1908, was inaugurated. Immediately following the withdrawal of Mr. Arias from the race, Cromwell gave out to the New York Herald an interview expressing the greatest gratification over the withdrawal of Mr. Arias. [Laughter.]

On the 1st day of September, 1908, President Amador sent his

On the 1st day of September, 1908, President Amador sent his farewell message to the general assembly of Panama. That message marks the withdrawal of this old statesman from the stormy politics of Central America. I will publish in the appendix to my speech some extracts from his message. In his message he directly charges Secretary Taft with forcing the Constitutional party from the field in Panama and with compelling the election of Obaldia. The proof I have here, and which I will print in full in the Record, establishes absolutely the combination between Secretary Taft, representing this Government, and Cromwell and his friends to force upon Panama the election of Obaldia. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Cromwell's plans for the spoliation of that country are now in operation on the Isthmus of Panama.

Not long ago Mr. Cromwell testified before the Senate investigating committee that he received no compensation for his services as attorney for the Republic of Panama. In reply to a question asked by Senator Simmons as to what the inducement was that prompted him to render that service to the Republic his reply was:

The broad instinct of good nature which has prompted me to do so much work for that cause, Senator, and the other consideration that I have more money than I need, unfortunately.

I regret exceedingly that I can not agree with Mr. Cromwell as to the motives for his activity in connection with this little Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield thirty minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RAINEY. The Republic of Panama possesses two sources of income, and only two—her immense forests and the income she gets from her invested funds. Under a clause in the constitution of Panama, $6,000,000 of the $10,000,000 we paid her for canal rights is invested in New York securities. It is unnecessary for me to say that William Nelson Cromwell is the gentleman who has charge and absolute control of this enormous investment. It yields about $265,000 a year. This investment is to continue a sacred trust forever. In the year 1913, under the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty, we commence to pay as rental for the Canal Zone, to the Republic of Panama, $250,000 per year. In this way we seek to prevent the Republic of Panama from becoming a charge on our revenues. Having guaranteed the independence of the Republic of Panama, it becomes necessary for us, as a matter of common honesty, to protect the revenues of that little Government until they are able to take care of themselves.

The plan of Mr. Cromwell and his associates is to absolutely appropriate to their own use the revenues of the Republic and to steal the forests and the public lands. The necessity for Mr. Taft's interference and for the election of Obaldia becomes now as plain as day.

There is pending now in the General Assembly of Panama the most infamous railroad proposition ever submitted to any Government. That infant Republic has had no experience in building or managing railroads. This proposition is being seriously considered and about to be adopted by the General Assembly.

considered and about to be adopted by the General Assembly.

Randolph G. Ward, of the city of New York, is the person who appears of record in the matter, and who seeks to get for his successors, his heirs or assigns, most valuable concessions. His proposition is to build a railroad from Panama to David, a distance of 441.59 kilometers. The proposed charter, however, provides that the railroad may be 450 kilometers long. In fact, the charter provides for a number of spurs and extensions.

The road is to be built along the line of the survey for the Pan-American Railroad. The Pan-American Railroad as surveyed runs through the present Republic of Panama from Costa Rica to Colombia on the Pacific slope. David is a small city near the boundary of Costa Rica west of the city of Panama. The proposition provides for a grant of 1,000 hectares of land for each kilometer of railroad built. If they only build the line from David to Panama, this means a grant of 450,000 hectares of land. For building this line alone this company is to get over 1,125,000 acres of land, and they are to be permitted locate the land where they please along the line of the survey of the Pan-American Railroad from Panama to Colombia. In other words, with their right of way and tracks, they appropriate the line of survey from Panama west to Costa Rica, and then are to be permitted to take possession of over a million acres of land along the line of the survey east from Panama to Colombia, where they do not propose now to build a railroad, thus shutting out any rival east-to-west railroad on the Isthmus of Panama, and there is only room for one east-to-west road on that narrow strip of land.

The timber in the Republic of Panama is the best and most valuable in all the world at the present time. It will be easier and cheaper to get lumber from the Republic of Panama to our Atlantic coast cities than it is now to get lumber from our States in the West and Northwest to those points.

No surveys of any importance have ever been made in Panama. It is impossible to state the extent of her immense forests. If the Gatun dam is a possibility, it will create a lake covering 225 square miles, reaching valuable timber lands. The area of forests in the district of Colon alone comprise 15,000 square miles. The forests are all owned by the Government. An effort was made by the Bureau of Forestry last year to obtain information with reference to the forests of Panama. Mr. Kellogg, our consul at Colon, complied with the request and sent what available data there was. Mr. Arnold Shanklin, the American consul-general at Panama, failed to make any report at all. Mr. Shanklin evidently feels that he owes his position there to William Nelson Cromwell. On account of his failure to report, no man in this country knows, except Mr. Cromwell and his associates, anything about the immense timber resources of that section of the Republic of Panama.

The timber in Panama does not grow on inaccessible mountain slopes and in valleys difficult to reach. The country is not particularly mountainous. Roads are not difficult to build. The building of a few roads opening up the immense forests of Panama ought to make the timber alone on the public lands in Panama worth an immense sum—more than the timber is worth upon our own timbered lands in the West.

The forests sought to be obtained by this concession ought to yield in the course of the next fifty years between five hundred million and one billion dollars.

The charter provides for an issue of bonds known as "class A bonds" to the amount of $3,300,000, and for an issue of bonds known as "class B bonds" amounting to $5,500,000. Both bond issues draw interest at 4½ per cent. The Government is asked to pledge the entire revenue from its fixed investments in New York to the payment of the interest on the class B bonds. The class B bonds, according to the report of the Pan-American survey, are sufficient in amount to pay the entire expenses of building this railroad except the expense for steel rails and laying the same. It is only proposed to lay 56-pound rails. To pay the interest on the class B bonds would require every year $247,500. In other words, the New York investments of the Republic of Panama would yield just about enough money to pay the interest on these bonds.

It would be easy, of course, under these circumstances to build this road. In addition to these propositions the charter proposed provides for a grant to the railroad of the entire water front of the city of Panama—

From the northeast bastion of the city southward and westward along the present boundaries of the city to an intersection with the boundary of the Canal Zone at the extremity of a point of land projecting out into the sea in the direction of a small island.

The proposed charter gives the company the right to fill-up the harbor of Panama for an indefinite distance out into the sea. It authorizes the company to build there its railroad terminals, shops, and so forth, and to use the reclaimed land for any purpose the railroad may desire, including dry docks. The charter authorizes the company to build subways under the present city of Panama in order to reach this proposed reclaimed section. In other words, this infamous proposal contemplates shutting out the present city of Panama from the sea and building in front of it, along the most beautiful bay in the world, a new city, to be owned absolutely by this railroad company.

The city of Panama is not in the Canal Zone. It is especially exempted by the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty. The Canal Zone extends across the Isthmus occupying a strip of land 5 miles wide on each side of the "canal to be built." The cities of Panama and Colon would be included within this strip if it were not for the fact that the treaty contains the proviso that these cities are not to be included in the Canal Zone. railroad company we own very recently expended $2,000,000 in building a pier out into the sea so as to enable vessels to take on freight and discharge freight in a convenient manner. I think some of the bonds issued for this purpose are still outstanding. The concession sought will deprive us of valuable privileges and to a large extent, perhaps completely, would destroy the utility of the great dock we have built there and own. The voice of this administration has not been heard protesting against this infamous proposal.

The reclaimed land reaches the old site of the proposed Sosa locks and dam just at the Pacific Ocean shore line. The plan for building locks here, however, seems to be temporarly abandoned. But if we propose to build dry docks to be operated in connection with the canal, there is no better place than this to build them. This company, however, proposes to occupy this site themselves, and the United States Government hereafter can acquire rights there, if this proposition goes through, only by condemnation proceedings.

Let me call attention to the fact that the gentlemen who are back of this railroad scheme, if they stand in with the administration here and with the Canal Commission, can get this land reclaimed with no expense whatever to them.

Immense excavations are to be made on the site of the locks nearest the Pacific Ocean shore line, and there will be considerable excavation between the Pacific Ocean shore line and the site of the Pedro-Miguel locks and dam. Then there is the great Culebra Cut only 6 miles away, with its limitless supply of material for filling in the ocean front of the city of Panama. The harbor of Panama is not a particularly inconvenient place for dumping clay and sand and rock excavated from the Culebra and Obispo cuts. I simply make this suggestion in order to show the possibilities connected with this infamous proposal.

The charter provides that the revenues derived from the sale of reclaimed lands in the Bay of Panama shall be applied, first, to the cost of reclaiming the lands, and then to the payment of the interest and the principal on the class A bonds. In other words, by this proposition these gentlemen expect to obtain the forests and all the public lands of any value on the Pacific slope of the Republic of Panama and to absorb all the revenue the Republic derives from its New York investments. This is the only definite and sure source of income the Republic has at the present time. And the gentlemen back of this scheme also expect to get the entire water front of the city of Panama for an indefinite distance out in the sea, and to build there on lands that will be among the most valuable in the world, when the canal is completed, a city of their own. They propose to stand there at the Pacific gateway of the canal, which the people of this country expect to build at an enormous cost, and to levy tribute upon the canal and the city and Kepublic of Panama, and indirectly upon the people of the United States. This proposition is being seriously considered in the general assembly of Panama; and if the speech I am now making does not awaken the public conscience in this country and in Panama, the charter will be agreed to at an early date. I will publish this proposed charter in full in the appendix to my speech.

In addition to all this, a group of American financiers is seeking to obtain possession of all the timbered lands in the Republic of Panama on the Atlantic slope. This project for the spoliation of the country is not having such clear sailing as the other. Some opposition to it has been occasioned by the fact that the people of Panama have learned of efforts to bribe the officials of the former administration by the gentlemen interested in this project, and on account of that fact they are suspicious. They do not realize yet that the immense timber resources of Panama are of any value to the country. The forests have never been exploited, and what little timber has been taken out and shipped to New York was rudely fashioned with the ax for shipment. There are no sawmills on the Isthmus of Panama of any importance.

These two schemes are proceeding with such absolute harmony, and there seems to be such a concerted agreement, that neither is to impling upon the other, that I am driven to the conclusion that are being proposed by the same gentlement.

conclusion they are being promoted by the same gentlemen.

It will be interesting to know who the gentlemen are who are attempting in this way to impoverish the Republic of Panama. The proposition is not a new one. John Ehrman, the son-in-law of Doctor Amador, presented the contract to Doctor Amador for his approval before the expiration of his term of office as president of Panama. Doctor Amador refused to approve it. This was one of the things which brought about the activity of Mr. Cromwell in the elections of last July, resulting in the success of Obaldia. After the term of office of Obaldia commenced, the contract was presented to Obaldia and it has now been signed by that gentleman.

They have a law on the Isthmus of Panama which prevents the President from giving away over 5,000 hectares of land. This makes it probably necessary, as I understand the situation, to get the approval of the General Assembly for this proposed grant. At any rate the promoters of this scheme think it would be safer to have it, and they are trying now to get it.

On the night of Sunday, December 27, certain members of the General Assembly of Panama were invited to the palace of the President. The President explained to them the conditions of the proposed timber concession. Some inquisitive members of the assembly on that occasion demanded that they be permitted to know the names of the responsible parties back of John Ehrman. They insisted they had the right to know who Ehrman really represented. At that time and on that occasion Obaldia told them that Mr. Ehrman represented the following citizens of the United States—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. OVERSTREET. How far has the time been used, Mr. Chairman? What is the division?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has used one hour and fifteen minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee has used one hour and forty-six minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think the other side is rather encroaching upon the time. We are endeavoring to divide the time equally, and there are several gentlemen who wish to speak.

Mr. RAINEY. I think I will get through in ten minutes.
Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman say that he will not ask for another increase of time?

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman ought not to ask me to make that pledge.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I have yielded ten minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that under the rules of the House not more than an hour can be yielded to any one man without unanimous consent.

Mr. RAINEY. I will get through in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this is not the last speech I am going to make on the Panama Canal question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

On Sunday night, the 27th day of December, Obaldia called to his palace certain members of the general assembly, and they then and at that time demanded of him to know who the men were back of John Ehrman, representing that John Ehrman had no particular financial standing, and at that time they were told that the men who were back of this infamous, outrageous scheme were William Nelson Cromwell; Roger L. Farnham, his confidential clerk; W. S. Harvey; and Charles P. Taft. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Meetings are now being held in the public parks of Panama protesting against the proposed contract. It is being vigorously defended by the administration. It is not difficult to influence some Spanish-American statesmen. Efforts to bribe the former administration in this particular are openly discussed and practically admitted in Panama, and it may be that the potent influences of Mr. Cromwell will yet prevail.

I incorporate in the appendix to my speech a number of letters on this subject. Among others, a letter from La Guardia, one of Obaldia's opponents, charging that the attempt is to secure this valuable concession for the benefit of a foreign syndicate, and calling attention to the attempts to bribe government officials in the matter. This letter brought a reply from Ramon M. Valdes, a member of the cabinet of Obaldia, on behalf of Obaldia. I have had the reply translated, and I incorporate Señor Valdes states that Obaldia, on account of his high position as President of the Republic of Panama, can not reply to his critics. Therefore he, Valdes, makes the reply for him. It will be noted in this connection that the present President of the United States is not afflicted with any delicacy of this character. Valdes in his reply simply bases his defense upon a letter written by Doctor Amador on the 31st day of December, I will also print this letter in the appendix to my speech.

In this letter this old statesman declines to go further than to say:

I never told anyone that a sum of money was offered to me.

He does not deny that the attempt to bribe was made. He states that Mr. Drake, a former member of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad Company, was active in attempting to get him to sign the contract, and his letter contains the following significant statement with reference to the private secretary and the confidential agent of William Nelson Cromwell:

It was Mr. Farnham who on many accounts insisted that I should make the contract, assuring me in a short time he and his family would e very rich.

Doctor Amador also states that Ramon M. Valdes, while a private citizen, was active in promoting this particular contract, and it is interesting in this connection to note that Ramon M. Valdes was so useful to Mr. Cromwell that in the changes effected there by him in the recent elections Señor Valdes became the secretary of state for Obaldia, and it is Señor Valdes who makes the defense for Obaldia.

Unless public sentiment is awakened in this country at once. and unless this administration interferes in some way on the Isthmus of Panama, both of these contracts will go through and the complete impoverishment of that country will follow as a The Panamanians are wards of this Governmatter of course. We ought to protect them until they are able to take themselves. We have guaranteed forever the independcare of themselves. ence of the Republic of Panama. In good faith we ought to enforce this provision not only as against all other governments, but as against those citizens of the United States, the friends and advisers of this administration and the next administration, who are proposing these infamous schemes.

Since the election of last November bread lines have commenced to form in the streets of our principal cities, and to-day in the Capital City, on Pennsylvania avenue, under the shadow of the Dome of the Capitol, a bread line appears daily, constantly increasing in length. If we permit the scheme of William Nelson Cromwell, Roger L. Farnham, and the others to go through on the Isthmus of Panama, this Government will have there a bread line containing 400,000 people.

The men who are attempting to steal and to appropriate to their own use the revenues of this Republic are in reality about to impose enormous additional burdens upon the Treasury of the United States. To-day the deficit in the Treasury is over $74,000,000. If we permit these men to rob the Republic of Panama, we will place upon the United States the oppressive burden of providing a government for 400,000 people there.

Over three hundred years ago Morgan, the buccaneer, the original buccaneer on this continent, advanced across the Isthmus of Panama with fire and with sword, murdering men, torturing women and children, leaving in his wake the smoking ruins of destroyed cities. But he did not work half as much destruction on the Isthmus of Panama as these modern buccaneers of finance are trying to work.

Now, our duty ought to be plain. We guaranteed their independence on the Isthmus of Panama against all nations of the world. We ought to guarantee their independence against the outrageous demands of these modern buccaneers of finance.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not charge that the gentleman who will be inaugurated President of the United States on the 4th day of March is a party to this infamous scheme for robbing this little country. I have only presented the evidence. His friendship for Cromwell; his selection of Cromwell, Farnham, Drake, and Obaldia as members of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad; his continued indorsements of both Cromwell and Farnham; his interference on the Isthmus of Panama, which compelled the election of a corrupt statesman, absolutely under the control of Cromwell, as President of that Republic-all these things and other things for which the present administration is responsible-made possible the signing of the contract by Obaldia which may bring to the gentlemen interested therein riches beyond the dreams of avarice. It will not be long, if this scheme goes through, before the campaign contributions made by some of the gentlemen interested in this enterprise will be returned a hundredfold.

There are pending to-day in the Senate of the United States certain treaties affecting Colombia and Panama. It is impossible to tell just what these treaties contain—no man knows except officials connected with the State Department and members of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. I might say, however, that William Nelson Cromwell and his secretary, Roger L. Farnham, while not connected with the State Department, have been actively engaged here with the representatives of Colombia and Panama for two or three weeks promoting these treaties.

It is understood that these treaties are for the purpose of adjusting certain boundary-line disputes between Panama and Colombia, and a certain claim on the part of Colombia that Panama should contribute to the payment of the public debt of Colombia, as it stood at the time of the independence of Panama. It is currently reported that in these treaties, which await now the confirmation of the Senate of the United States, and after that the confirmation of the Senate of Colombia, there is a provision that Panama within a definite period, probably within the next ten years, must pay to Colombia an indemnity of a million dollars or more, and it is also understood that the United States guarantees the payment of this immense sum. We are therefore already assuming the burden of providing out of our Treasury for the Republic of Panama.

If we permit the plans of Mr. Cromwell and his associates to go through on the Isthmus of Panama, and if these treaties are confirmed, there will be no revenues in Panama out of which to pay this indemnity. The United States Government will be called upon to pay it all, and if these plans for the spoliation of Panama proceed to a successful conclusion it will not be long until immense burdens of a different character connected with Panama will be imposed upon our Treasury.

These patriotic gentlemen, therefore, are being permitted not only to rob the Republic of Panama, but indirectly to rob the Treasury of the United States, and in their efforts in this direction they have had so far the complete cooperation and the active assistance of the present administration and of the next President of the United States. [Long-continued applause.]

THE TIMBER RESOURCES OF PANAMA.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF MANUFACTURES,
Washington, January 15, 1999.

Hon. Henry T. Rainey,

House of Representatives.

Dear Mr. Rainey; Your letter of the 11th instant, addressed to the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, has been referred to this office for reply. The timber resources of the various countries of the world was the subject of a special investigation last year, which was made upon the request of the Bureau of Forestry and ordered by the State Department, the investigations and reports being made by the various consular officers stationed abroad. These reports from some countries are very complete, while from others the information is rather vague. Some consular officers made no reports, including Mr. Arnold Shanklin, the American consul-general at Panama. A brief report on Panama was made by Consul James C. Kellog, at Colon, which I take pleasure in forwarding to you herewith for perusal. The Forestry Bureau made very limited use of these reports, and this bureau has under consideration their publication in extenso. Would ask, therefore, that you kindly return the report within a few days.

Very truly, yours,

John M. Carson,

Chief of Bureau.

John M. Carson, Chief of Bureau.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND FOR LUMBER IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES. [Copy of report forwarded with above letter.]

[Copy of report forwarded with above letter.]

1. For several years no wood has been exported from the district of Colon. The estimated amount imported during the year 1907 was 4,486 tons, all of which came from the United States, and in the form of boards, planks, scantling, and flooring, the latter rough or planed with tongue and groove, which costs in the local markets from 4 to 5 cents a square foot. In addition ready-made doors and blinds are imported from the United States, which cost from $4 to $7 a pair.

2. Formerly logs of cedar, cocobolo, and mahogany were exported to the United States and England, the larger portion going to England. These logs were sold for 50 cents a cubic foot. Until recently a small sawmill located at Porto Bello cut up cedar logs into boards and scantling for the local market, which sold for 4 cents a square foot.

This mill has, however, suspended operations on account of scarcity of labor and lack of roads.

3. All of the wood imported comes from the United States with the exception of a small amount of cedar and other hard woods, which is exported from the Atrato River, Colombia, cut up into boards, scantling, and flooring, retailing at the same price as the American lumber, which latter consists of pitch pine, with the exception of a small amount of planed boards of white pine.

4. The Republic of Panama is fully capable of producing all the wood consumed at home.

5. The only measures necessary in order to supply the demand are securing more labor and building proper roads through the forests, which are immense in extent, virtually intact, and requiring no measures to increase their productiveness.

7. Judging from the vast areas of virgin forests to be found in the countries of South and Central America, it is reasonable to suppose that those countries would be able, for generations, to supply the demand of the nations for wood. Of course, in time, their supply would be diminished, and it would become necessary, in order that their forest resources should not become totally exhausted, to inaugurate a system of forestry supervision, as has been practiced in France and Germany for many years, and which, during the last twenty years, has also been adopted in the United States.

8. The area of forests in the district of Colon comprises about 15,000 square miles, and contains enough wood to supply the Republic of Panama, so I am told, for hundreds of years. The only reason why lumber is imported is because there is a lack of labor, public roads, and machinery; the little that has been exported has been shaped with axes. The forests are owned by the Government, and the expenditures and revenues on them amount to practically nothing. There are no statistics showing the yield in wood, nor the extent of the present stand. As far as I can ascertain, there is very little exploiting of the forests either by the Government or pr

HOW THE UNITED STATES DOES NOT OWN A RAILROAD AND A LINE OF STEAMSHIPS.

Extract from the hearings before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, in the United States Senate, February 27, 1906:

"Senator Morgan. We own the railroad absolutely, do we not?

"Mr. Cromwell. Of course you know—you do not mean that, speaking as a lawyer? You mean that in colloquial terms we own it?

"Senator Morgan. Is there anything about it that we do not own?

"Mr. Cromwell. No, sir; I am speaking only as a matter of law. Of course the United States does not own the railroad.

"Senator Morgan. Is there any piece of property down there belonging to the railroad company that we do not own?

"Mr. Cromwell. It is all covered by the capital stock of the corporation, and the United States Government owns every single share of that capital stock.

"Senator Morgan. Is it covered by the capital stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. Yes, sir.

"Senator Morgan. But we have also got the actual possession of all the property that belongs to that railroad?

"Mr. Cromwell. The railroad has possession of the railroad through the ownership of the stock.

"Senator Morgan. Yes. Well, it is hard to divide between the two. The railroad owns the property?

"Mr. Cromwell. How is it, any more than it is to consider the ownership of a bank? Suppose you own some shares in the stock of a bank. If you own all the shares, you do not own the bank, but you own the shares.

"Senator Morgan. If you own the bank and all the money in the bank and all its cash—

"Mr. Cromwell. No, sir; of course not. You can not violate law and disregard the legal relations. Of course not.

"Senator Morgan. We seem to have done it.

"Mr. Cromwell. No, sir; of course not.

"Senator Morgan. The United States owns all the stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. No, sir; of course not.

"Senator Morgan. We seem to have done it.

"Mr. Cromwell. We see served it with greatest respect. The United States has preserved its status.

"Senator Morgan. The United States owns all the stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. Yes.

"Senator Morgan. And all the stock covers all the property?

"Mr. Cromwell. Yes.

"Senator Morgan. And the United States is not the owner of the property, either in law or in equity?

"Mr. Cromwell. I did not say in equity.

"Senator Morgan. I am asking about law and equity both.

"Mr. Cromwell. I was talking of law.

"Senator Morgan. I am quite willing.

"Senator Morgan. The United States owns all the stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. I am quite willing.

"Senator Morgan. And the stock covers all the property?

"Mr. Cromwell. Yes, sir.

"Senator Morgan. How is it that the United States, either in law or in equity, is not the owner of the stock and property?

"Mr. Cromwell. Because there is a legal entity intervening, and that legal entity is the Panama Railroad Corporation, a regularly chartered corporation of the State of New York, having its duties to the State of New York, its duties as a common carrier, and all the obligations of a corporation.

"Senator Morgan. Is it that legal entity that you represent as a director?

"Mr. Cromwell. I am a director, one of the thirteen; yes, sir.

director?

"Mr. Cromwell. I am a director, one of the thirteen; yes, sir.

"Senator Morgan. Representing that legal entity?

"Mr. Cromwell. Representing that corporation, that legal entity.

"Senator Morgan. How about the legal entity you have just described? Do you represent that?

- "Mr. Cromwell. I am one of thirteen directors of that legal entity. "Senator Morgan. How much stock do you own in the railroad? "Mr. Cromwell. One share, sir. "Senator Morgan. I thought you said that the United States owned it all? "Mr. Cromwell. I will now proceed to describe to you how I own that one share.

"Mr. Cromwell. I will now proceed to describe to you how I own that one share.

"Senator Morgan. No; you said yesterday very emphatically, and repeated it two or three times, that the United States owned every share of the stock in that company?

"Mr. Cromwell. It does own every share.

"Senator Morgan. Then, if it belongs to the United States, it does not belong to you.

"Mr. Cromwell. I told you, also, that I would describe to you how we had qualified the thirteen directors.

"Senator Morgan. Let us see how that was done. That is a process that I wanted to understand.

"Mr. Cromwell. Yes, sir.

"Senator Morgan. Let us see how that was done. Under the laws—and I question the wisdom of my making this statement, as a matter of public record, but I am called upon to do it.

"Senator Morgan. It is always wiser to tell the truth, if you can do it.

do it. "Mr. Cromwell. It is sometimes imprudent to disclose your affairs

"Senator Morgan. It is sometimes imprudent to disclose your affairs to the public.

"Senntor Morgan. Yes.

"Mr. Cromwell. But the responsibility is upon you and not upon me for that.

"Senator Morgan. You are not under any professional obligation not to do it?

"Mr. Cromwell. No, sir.

"Senator Morgan. Go ahead, then. That is the first time I have found you free.

"Mr. Cromwell. In order to maintain the legal entity intact and the corporate functions it is necessary that each director be in law an owner of at least one share of stock.

"Senator Morgan. Under what law is that?

"Mr. Cromwell. The New York state law.

"Senator Morgan. Yes.

"Mr. Cromwell. Accordingly, each, of the 13 directors has made an agreement with the United States Government, in writing, by which they agree to deliver that share to the United States at any time, upon the call of the United States, and have indorsed the certificate therefor and returned and delivered it to the Treasury of the United States.

"Senator Morgan. And have delivered it?

"Mr. Cromwell. Certainly; so that the United States, in its Treasury—and you may walk over there in five minutes and see them in the Treasury Department—has every single physical share of the stock. Thirteen of them, however, stand in the names of the 13 directors, who have paid upon account a small sum, in order to make the transaction one of absolute legality, with the right and option upon the part of the United States to take back the share upon payment of the balance, the United States to take back the share upon payment of the certificate of stock itself, indorsed by each director. That transaction qualifies each director under the law, but protects the United States in the possession of the certificates.

"Senator Morgan. So to speak. I do not believe it.

"Senator Tallaferro. Does not the law require bona fide ownership?

"Mr. Cromwell. I think that is bona fide ownership in the sense that each director raid upon account a certain "Senator Taliaferro. Does not the law require bona fide ownership?

"Mr. Cromwell. I think that is bona fide ownership in the sense of the law, in the sense that each director paid upon account a certain sum, giving to the United States the right to call for the share and take it by paying the balance.

"Senator Morgan. Did you prepare this arrangement?
"Mr. Cromwell. I assisted the Secretary of War in making the arrangement.
"Senator Morgan. As counsel of the Panama Railroad?
"Mr. Cromwell. As counsel of the Panama Railroad?
"Mr. Cromwell. It was it not your plan?
"Mr. Cromwell. It was a joint discussion as to how we should qualify the directors.
"Senator Morgan. You prepared the plan and then discussed it with the Secretary of War, did you not?
"Mr. Cromwell. We discussed it and I projected it. I prepared the draft paper: yes.

"Senator Morgan. You prepared the plan and then discussed it with the Secretary of War, did you not?

"Mr. Cromwell. We discussed it and I projected it. I prepared the draft paper: yes.

"Senator Morgan. You prepared the paper and discussed it with the Secretary of War; so that it was your invention?

"Mr. Cromwell. It was no invention. It is a common practice. There was nothing original about it, Senator. I do not claim any patent upon it.

"Senator Morgan. It may be a common practice, but I can say that it is the first time I have ever heard of it. You have not got the physical possession, as you call it, of that certificate of stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. Individually? Persohally, you mean?

"Senator Morgan. Yes.

"Mr. Cromwell. No, sir.

"Senator Morgan. And you have indorsed it to the Government?

"Mr. Cromwell. Absolutely.

"Senator Morgan. And it is in the Treasury of the United States?

"Mr. Cromwell. Every share.

"Senator Morgan. What more, then, do you hold in regard to your office of director than a power of attorney from the United States Government to act as director in that railroad?

"Mr. Cromwell. I would not care to qualify it, sir, otherwise than as I have mentioned.

"Senator Morgan. How about Mr. Farnham's stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. The same thing.

"Senator Morgan. He same thing.

"Senator Morgan. He got the stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. At the last annual meeting he was qualified in the same way that I have described.

"Senator Morgan. He got the stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. No, sir.

"Senator Morgan. He got the stock?

"Mr. Cromwell. No, sir.

"Senator Morgan. He got his one share under exactly the circumstances that you got yours?

SECRETARY TAFT'S VISIT TO ISTHMUS.

FECRETARY TAPT'S VISIT TO ISTHMUS.

[Panama Star and Herald, May 11, 1908.]

The visit to the Isthmus of the Hon. William H. Taft, United States Secretary of War, is an event out of the ordinary and one that has given rise to much speculation. * * It has been asserted, for instance, that Mr. Taft's visit here is in connection with the political situation. It is true that the presidential campaign is being conducted with some fervor, but it is not easy to see why this should attract the attention of the United States Minister, as no American interests are involved and no overt violation of any treaty arrangement or breach of public order has occurred or is likely.

MR. SQUIRES'S VISIT.

[Panama Star and Herald, June 15, 1908.]

In view of the delicate political situation in the country when probable American intervention is the topic of the hour, it is easy to understand that the presence of Minister Squires is necessary at the State Department, in order that he may furnish detailed information regarding the conditions here such as could not well be communicated over

PANAMA TO BE SEIZED BY AMERICAN ARMY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1908.

After a fevered existence of four years, the Republic of Panama is to be snuffed out, in fact if not in name. An American army is to be dispatched to the Isthmus as soon as Secretaries Taft and Metcalf can make the arrangements.

The Republic is to be seized, all right. The only question is as to how the work of straightening out its affairs is to be done. Secretary Taft and William Nelson Cromwell, the administration's Pooh-Bah on Panama affairs, decided that the seizure could not be longer delayed.

SIX HUNDRED MARINES FOR PANAMA. [Panama Journal, June 24, 1908.]

WASHINGTON.

In anticipation of election riots in Panama, President Roosevelt has ordered 600 additional officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to proceed at once to the Canal Zone. Besides this, there are 300 marines on board the Tacoma and Prairie sailing for there. They will be placed at various places, a certain number being placed at each polling precinct to prevent fraud. The battle ships New Hampshire and Idaho are ordered to leave New York for Colon on Sunday.

HURRYING MARINES TO ISTHMUS MAY SUPPRESS REPUBLIC. [Panama Journal, June 27, 1908.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.

A force of 1,800 marines will be assembled in the Canal Zone in less than a month to overhaul President Amador, of Panama, and if warrant is found, to selze the toy Republic and establish a provisional government. Two hundred of the expeditionary force are on their way now. The first detachment started from Philadelphia on the auxiliary cruiser Prairie on June S, and the second hundred on the cruiser Tacoma from the same station.

AMERICANS AT THE POLLS. [Panama Journal, June 25, 1908.]

[Panama Journal, June 25, 1908.]

Now that the talk of American intervention in Panama has subsided, we now give the exact position which these Yankees will occupy at the forthcoming elections. We have been told by well-informed persons that every launch in the service of the Ishmian Canal Commission has been requisitioned by the Zone Government to convey saliors or United. States marines to the different electoral districts of the Republic, where they will preside at the polls during the 28th instant and the 12th of July next in numbers of from 5 to 20 at each poll, while others will be in the districts held in readiness for any emergency during the elections, and it is stated that at least 100 United States blue jackets will be stationed in Panama rendy for any duty. The days are now counted by hours, and we will watch every action in this matter with the keenest interest for the benefit of our readers.

AMERICAN INTERVENTION.

[Panama Star and Herald, June 15, 1908.]

Article 136 of the national constitution reads:
"The Government of the United States of America can intervene in any part of the Republic of Panama for the purpose of establishing the public peace and constitutional order in event of same having been disturbed, in case, by virtue of public treaty, that nation assumes, or will have assumed, the obligation to guarantee the independence and sovereignty of this Republic."

In view of the above and the history-making epoch through which the Republic of Panama is at present laboring, the following questions present themselves to us and require thorough elucidation:

"Is American intervention in the Republic of Panama constitutionally legal? Most certainly, yes.

"Can the American Government intervene at will? No; because according to article 136, quoted above, the only object of intervention is the restoration of public peace and order, when that peace and order have been disturbed.

"Has the public peace of Panama been disturbed? No.

"Has even the constitutional order been violated? No; emphatically, no.

ally, no.

"Then for what reason or on account of what occurrences has American intervention been forced upon us at the present time?"

This last question is the question constantly before all Isthmians, with the exception of the followers of Mr. Obaldia, who have really sought and requested this intervention as a weapon in the coming electoral battle.

On election day, God forbid it, there may pass in Panama something which, like the explosion of the Maine in Cuba, may serve as a cause so that all of us remain enmeshed in the common conflagration, for it is not true that the Americans are to-day, in the world, the heralds of purity of suffrage, and that solely through love of this purity do they come to break lances in a foreign land, whilst in their own country the recollection that ballot boxes, full of ballots, were thrown into the muddy waters of the Mississippi still remains fresh.

THE MARINES LANDED AT COLON.

[The New York Herald, Sunday, June 28, 1908.]

COLON, PANAMA, Saturday.

The American battle ship New Hampshire arrived here at twenty minutes to 8 o'clock last night, and the battle ship Idaho came in at 7 o'clock this morning. Both vessels are anchored in the roadstead and have large contingents of marines on board. Three hundred marines from the battle ships were landed at Cristobal this morning and sent to Mount Hope, where the Isthmian Canal Commission storehouse containing United States property valued at more than a million dollars is located, and at other points along the line.

The cruiser Prairie is now lying alongside pier No. 11 at Cristobal with a full complement of men in readiness to protect property at that place. Col. E. K. Cole is in command of the American troops on the Isthmus.

ARMY SECRETLY WATCHES PANAMA.

[New York Herald, Tuesday, June 30, 1908.]

(By Mexican cable to the Herald, Panama, via Galveston, Tex., Monday.)

These United States Army officers here on a secret-service mission have been at the Hotel Tivoll since last Tuesday, registered as civilians under correct names, but from different cities:

"Lieut. Col. Benjamin Alvord, Capt. W. S. Scott, Lieut. J. S. Johnson, Capt. M. B. Stokes, Capt. H. D. Wise, Capt. H. P. Miller, Capt. Wert Robinson, Capt. T. W. Darrah, Capt. P. E. Traub, Capt. Arthur Thayer, and Captain Mechan."

The above paper also announces that officers are stationed at the Hotel Tivoli, registered as private citizens. When their identity was discovered, they asked that their identity be not made known.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTER OF WILLIAM H. TAFT, THREATENING INTER-VENTION.

I venture to suggest to your excellency, therefore, that in view of the charges which have been made, the wisest course for your Government to take is to give into the hands of a person admittedly impartial, as between Señor Arias and Señor Obaldia, the administration of the interior department having control of the election machinery, and that you arrange with the zone authorities to allow two Americans at each polling district in the Republic to be present in the booths to watch the voting and to witness the count, so that there may be available impartial witnesses as to the fairness of the election.

You are authorized to say to President Amador that the Government of the United States will consider any attempt at the election of a successor by fraudulent methods, which deny to a large part of the people opportunity to vote, constitutes a disturbance of public order which under Panama's constitution requires intervention, and this Government will not permit Panama to pass into the hands of one so elected.

I submit this memorandum to your excellency in the presence of the American minister, Mr. Squires, and Commissioner Blackburn, the one representing the State Department and the other the commission.

With the earnest hope that the great catastrophe of a fraudulent election may be avoided, I beg to subscribe myself, most sincerely, Your excellency's obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. TAFT.

The above extracts are from the letter of Secretary Taft while on the Isthmus of Panama, directed to President Amador, and dated at Culebra, Canal Zone, May 18, 1908, published in Panama Star and Herald, June 22, 1908.

SEÑOR ARIAS'S RENUNCIATION.

[Panama Star and Herald, July 6, 1908.]

Yesterday Señor Don Recardo Arias, candidate of the Constitutional party for the presidency, on perceiving that American intervention was near, it being very probable that trouble would ensue during the coming election, and the Liberal party refusing to come to a harmonious agreement, and desiring above all not to imperit the political independence of his country, declared his intention of withdrawing from Señor Arias's letter of renunciation, addressed to the directorate of the Constitutional party, follows:

PANAMA, July 4, 1908.

To the Members of the National Directorate of the Constitutional Party.

To the Members of the National Directorate of the Constitutional Party.

Gentemen: The events which have come to pass in the present electoral campaign, bearing as they do an international aspect, are well known and do not require recounting.

These events plainly demonstrate the imminent peril of the military occupation of this country by forces of the United States of America, the which would be a death blow to our national life. The whole country understands how inevitable this is, and what grave peril it involves, and for this reason it behooves us to avoid at all cost even the remotest probability of having to lament irremediable evils.

Moreover, as the sound political elements of the country, whose unanimous concurrence alone could lend aid to a stable and vigorous government, who could give impulse to the internal organization of the country, and who could present a proper solution of the grave exterior problems which confront us, are divided; and as I consider it unpartiotic to widen this breach, the possibility of my assuming the direction of the government under these conditions is to be discouraged.

In selecting me as a candidate for the presidency of this Republic you have given me a high proof of confidence, and my conscience tells me that should I not withdraw my name from the list, so that it may not serve as a cause for furthering the misfortunes of our country, I would not prove worthy of that confidence.

Therefore, after the most mature reflection, and guided solely by what I consider my patriotic duty, I have decided to present to you, as I now do present it, my renunciation of the candidacy for the presidency of the Republic with which you have honored me and to which afterwards have adhered, spontaneously and disinterestedly, the majority of the Liberal and Conservative Chiriquians and a considerable number of both parties in the other provinces of the Republic.

I take this opportunity to present, through you, to all the compatriots who have favored me with their disinterested and enthu

[The Panama Star and Herald, July 6, 1908.]

With a fine manifestation of patriotism, Mr. Arias offered to renounce his candidacy for the presidency which he has hitherto pushed with characteristic energy. Confident in a victory at the polls if the issue is dependent on the free suffrage of his countrymen, he has nevertheless elected to withdraw entirely from the contest rather than accept the result of an election conducted under circumstances which would reduce it to a farce and render the victorious candidate, whoever he may be, a puppet for the world's riddeule. * * *

The result of the action of Mr. Arias may mean the loss to the country of a firm and capable ruler.

By his renunciation the country loses, but if his continuance in the race would bring about the irreparable disaster which now threatens, the country is even more indebted to him for his unselfish action. * * We can but express the hope that the patriotic action of Mr. Ricardo Arias and the Constitutional Party may yet be the means of averting the loss of independence which now threatens the Republic.

VIEWS OF MR. CROMWELL.

The New York Herald reviews the situation at length. In its issue of the 6th instant it publishes the following:

"William Nelson Cromwell expressed the greatest gratification to-day when he learned from a Herald correspondent that Secretary Arias had withdrawn as a candidate for the presidency of the Republic of Panama, leaving the way clear for Don Domingo Obaldia." * * *

TAFT DENIES THAT HE THREATENED.

[Panama Star and Herald, July 20, 1908.]

HOT SPRINGS, VA., July 5.

Positive and unqualified denial was given to-night by William H. Taft of the statements and reports from Panama that he had warned Secretary Arias that Vice-President Obaldia was the only presidential possibility for that Republic.

Two radical steps have been taken by the War Department by the direction of Mr. Taft, after consultation with President Roosevelt. The first was the ordering of a large force of marines to the Isthums for the purpose of insuring a fair election, to which was added the additional precaution of sending officers of the army under orders not to disclose their identity to observe conditions prevailing on election day.

The New York Herald says:

"* * Obaldia quarreled with the Amador crowd, who put up Arlas against him. Obaldia, however, found means of obtaining the powerful assistance of Mr. Cromwell and later on the United States Government lined up with Cromwell and Obaldia. * * Whether Mr. Traft did or not send the ultimatum, Obaldia or intervention, there is little doubt that somebody made it clear to Arias and Amador that the pins were set up for Obaldia to win. The position of the United States Government was made clear to everyone in Panama when Minister Squires, official mouthpiece of the United States in its relations with the Panama Republic, was summoned to Washington. Squires had been favorable to the Amador party. He was ordered to report to Mr. Root and Mr. Taft, and returned to the Isthums, it is alleged, an almost open supporter of Obaldia."

Although no direct pressure was brought to bear from Washington which can be assigned as a cause for the resignation of Señor Arias as a candidate for the Presidency of Panama, it is stated authoritatively to-day at the War Department that the known attitude of Mr. Taft and the United States Government had something to do with Señor Arias having given up the race.

EXTRACT FROM A NEW YORK PAPER NOT AS YET CHARGED WITH LIBELING THE GOVERNMENT.

[The Evening Post, New York, Thursday, July 16, 1908.]

The mystery of the sudden withdrawal of Señor Arias from the presidential race in Panama is solved. It is precisely as we had suspected. The king, or, rather, president maker of this administration did it. When Señor Arias's friends got dispatches from William Nelson Cromwell, notifying them that if he did not withdraw the United States would probably intervene and establish a provisional government, because of the danger of serious disorder, Señor Arias promptly removed himself from the presidential race. It became a walk-over for his rival, and the 1,400 United States marines, 1,000 of whom had been hastily rushed to Panama, had nothing to do but sit in their barracks.

What better illustration of the bogus nature of the Roosevelt Republic of Panama could there be? What a fraud upon the great American people is there being perpetrated by the President, with the aid of Mr. Taft's connivance, up to the date of his retirement from office! If Señor Arias was a bona fide candidate, his being forced out was a gross wrong to his supporters as well as to him. Why go through the farce of holding elections in Panama? Let the President appoint whenever his Panamanian colleague's term expires. And what kind of disorders were threatened? They must have been serious, indeed, if fourteen hundred marines could not cope with them, backed by the crews of several warships. Conceived in corruption, the bastard republic of Messrs. Cromwell and Roosevelt fiourishes as an absolute humbug and fraud. humbug and fraud.

FROM PRESIDENT AMADOR'S MESSAGE TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF PAN-AMA—SECRETARY TAFT FORCED OBALDIA TO WITHDRAW FROM THE CONTEST.

[Message of September 1, 1908, of M. Amador, President of Panama, to the Assembly, as published in the Panama Star and Herald September 7, 1908.]

tember 7, 1908.]

Circumstances which we deplore, known to all of us, forced the Executive to appeal to and invite the American Government to ald us in an electoral investigation, which took place all over the land, so as to avoid greater irremediable evils.

The results of that electoral investigation, as you well know yourselves, proved how exaggerated the charges against this Government had been, as made by William H. Taft, who was then the Secretary of War of the United States, in the memorandum which is known to you, and demonstrated likewise that the two great parties in which the land found itself divided when the time of the elections drew near were equally divided in the electoral college, over which the Executive has not and could not legally have any control whatever.

Nevertheless, the situation as created by that memorandum, and the subsequent measures, which threaten seriously the very existence of the Republic, forced one of these great parties to leave the field in an absolute and patriotic manner, so that the returns of the polling places have not made known the will of the people.

OBALDIA'S CAREER.

Señor Don Jose Domingo de Obaldia, born at David, Panama, January, 1845.

1903 elected Senator, and was the only member of the Senate to support the Hay-Herran treaty. When this measure was defeated, he withdrew from the Colombian Congress.

Two months before declaration of Panamanian independence, became governor of Panama under President Marroquin.

After the independence of Panama, was imprisoned for two weeks, he being a Colombian official.

Soon afterwards reentered public life, having accepted the independence movement. Was named second vice-president under first administration, and soon after appointed by President Amador as minister of Panama to the United States.

During Doctor Amador's sojourn in Europe, in June of last year, he was recalled from Washington to act as President, he being at that time also first vice-president of Panama.

In February of this year he was nominated by a few members of the Constitutional party as candidate for President. The majority of that party was in favor of Mr. Arias, and in the early stages of the campaign the outlook was discouraging for Mr. Obaldia. He could muster only two-sevenths of the constitutional vote, but early in May the Liberal party adopted his candidacy, and this brought a decided improvement in his prospects.

At a mass meeting of Liberals in this city, Mr. Obaldia's programme was formally indorsed and a committee of the party notified the Hon. William H. Taft, then American Secretary of War, of their choice. Thereafter, Mr. Obaldia's prospects grew roseate. On the 4th of July, when party feeling was at its highest and fears of armed intervention by the United States were current, Mr. Arias averted a crisis by withdrawing his candidacy. The retirement of the Constitutional candidate left him in undisputed possession of the field. He now had a following among the Constitutional party and the bulk of the Liberals, and as the time was too short to allow the third candidate being brought forward with any likelihood of success, it was realized that his el

LETTER FROM LA GUARDIA TO OBALDIA WITH REFERENCE TO THE TIMBER CONTRACT CONTAINING SERIOUS CHARGES.

[Published in Panama Daily Star and Herald January 3, 1909.] Open letter.

PANAMA, December 29, 1908.

To His Excellency José Domingo de Obaldia,

President of the Republic, H. O.

Mr. President: After serene reflection I have the honor of sending you this letter with all the respect that you inspire me as the first magistrate of the nation.

May be you have seen that, after the past electoral campaign, during which I was one of your political opponents, I have limited my attitude to expectation and silence and consecrated myself entirely to the exercise of tasks that concern me as attorney-general, for which post I was nominated by your predecessor.

I say again that I have not taken part in active politics. I have waited to exercise this right, because I think that, after the effervescence of the presidential election, all citizens who aspire sincerely to the change of old and hereditary customs of bad government must accept the facts, deferring to the new executive during a prudential time, so he may begin and extend his plans, because I believe that systematic opposition will never be good for the country: they are absurb, they are not patriotic, they are "contraproducentem." So do not think that I am going to make an inopportune review of your government. It is not blameless, but this is not the occasion to censure it. censure it.

not think that I am going to make an inopportune review of your government. It is not blameless, but this is not the occasion to censure it.

I am not going to treat about politics.

This that exercises my mind is something most serious; something that affects the country itself, which obliges me to break my voluntary silence. I am going to speak about the contract that a foreign syndicate wants to obtain in order to get a wide, a new, and very big zone of our territory to exploit for fifty years, the woods of our Atlantic coast. This syndicate is represented by two of our countrymen, whom it is not necessary to name. They want this contract not for themselves, but to give it to other men. But it would be better that if they get it it were for them, because this grace, that may better be called national disgrace, would so remain within the family and would not inherit the danger of diplomatic reclamations, so terrible for weak countries. It is accustomed to-day by the great powers that the principle of not asking a reclamation, although signed by the parties, is not a guaranty enough of security. The strong governments, as the North American, allow themselves the right of caring for the citizens, no matter if these citizens have signed renunciation to protection. So it is necessary to closely keep our rights from people backed by such governments.

That contract is bad, your excellency, because we know that it is intended with it to sweeten our deep wishes of extending the public riches of the country. They want us to see it under a false aspect. They offer to buy our fine woods at a better price than in other parts, and our inferior woods at a lower price. It seems as if they say: "We will buy also your ashes." But here, precisely, is the deceit.

The great commercial men are masters in concealing their sentiments. They have introduced and they practice in the world of finance the maxim that "business is business." The meaning of this is that, keeping safe from the dangers of the penal code, all is allowed; th with this opprobrium all commercial men, or even the majority. Of these men, there are exemplars for good and for bad. But generally they are dangerous, and it is convenient to take with them all kinds of precautions.

Remember, sir, that our country is not yet of legal age.

That contract is bad, Mr. President, because its essence is to utilize at a laughable price our inferior woods for the manufacture of boxes, of very many thousands of boxes, that every day are greatly used in a way that is out of statistics to contain one so gigantic production as the North American. This production grows and grows every hour to meet the domestic and the international consumption. That business, such as conceived by the discoverers, has a face of patriotism but for them. They treat to economize his pine groves, which, no matter the cultivation, begin to resent from the axe and the industrial saw.

It is demonstrated by the high price the woods have reached on account of the enormous demands required by the reconstruction of San Fraucisco after the earthquake, those asked by the interoceanic canal, and many colossal enterprises now in execution or in project. Most of them are superior to the Panama Canal. This is not the greatest one unfolded, as many of our ill-informed countrymen believe. But it is not necessary to go deep to denounce as infamous a contract that was initiated at Paris under the delinquent auspices of an attempt at bribery.

That contract was born with the stigma, with the I. N. R. I. of dishonor in its pasteboards.

Here is, yet alive, the respectable old gentleman who preceded you in the supreme command. He is near to the tomb. But he will be covered by his sweat cloth at the same time that with the nimbus of having returned the infamous proposal with which he was tempted. There is also, full of youthfulness and life, the present deputy and secretary of public works at the same time. He can inform you that he was the messenger with whom the expresident, Amador, sent back the papers of the Infamous offer.

LETTER FROM DOCTOR AMADOR, FORMER PRESIDENT OF PANAMA, WITH REFERENCE TO THE TIMBER CONCESSION AND FARNHAM'S CONNECTION WITH IT.

[This letter was dated December 31, 1908, and was published in the Panama Journal January 5, 1909.]

SEÑOR DON JOSE DOMINGO DE OBALDIA.

SIR: I have carefully read your letter, in which you refer to the open letter of Señor Don Santiago de la Guardia.

I regret this incident which forces me to take part in a discussion from which I was anxious to remain entirely apart, both on account of my health and of the inconvenience to which it may put me.

To-day I am feeling so weak that I can hardly dictate these lines.

About a year ago, on my return from Europe, I spoke to various friends about the contract which had been proposed to me in Paris, and I related, without comments, how the matter stood, adding that I had refused the proposition because I thought it disadvantageous for our country.

This contract was proposed to me after an opinion had been given on it by a Panamanian lawyer, who, I believe, was Doctor Ramon M. Valdes, now secretary of state.

Manuel Obaidia was only present on one of the many interviews I had with the interested parties.

Mr. Drake, a man whom I highly esteem, spoke to me very little about the contract, confining himself to showing me its legality and advantages.

about the contract, comming ministr to showing me its legality and advantages.

It was Mr. Farnham who, on many accounts, insisted that I should make the contract, assuring me in a short time he and his family would be very rich.

D. de Obaldia, Invested as he is with the dignity of directly and personally with respect to the Carta Abiorta, which you have thought well to address him with reference to the contract which the Government effected with Señor Juan Everman, relative to the purchase of the timber of the forests situated on the Atlantic stope, and However, the position you occupy in society and the Government and the importance of the point under discussion are sufficient motives for leading attention to your words and for analyzing and replying to the reasons you addrese against aforesaid contract.

The attempt at bribery in this matter of timber has never taken place, neither with ex-President Amador nor with anyone else, as I am going to prove with his own reply, given by him in a letter of Señor Obaldia, a copy of which follows.

Those interested in this business of the purchase of timber are Messrs. W. S. Harvey, Alfred E. Drake, and Jonas E. Whitley, of the United States. Mr. Farnham had no part in this business, so far as I know, and there is no reason whatever to consider him as the attorney or representative of the gentlemen just named, because they have never accredited him as such before the President of Panama nor before any functionary of this Republic. So that his action with Doctor Amador, and his zeal, if really he showed it, to induce him to accept this contract has the character of an officious action, which compromised no one, and had no more force than that arising from the personal consideration which Doctor Amador professed for him. The circumstance that Mr. Farnham should have assured the expresident, as he says, that in a short time he and his family would be very wealthy, if he granted the concession, can in no way change the conclusion which I have deduced. Because those vague words are not an offer of money, and because they were not used by those truly and really interested, who attempted thus to persuade Doctor Amador Guerrero. He himself declares that Mr. Drake limited himself to showing the legality and desirability of the contract. This is a curious psychological case and resembles very much another one that I know of with respect to Doctor Amador, which occurred at the commencing of the electoral campaign. He affirmed to various persons that Dr. Belisario Porras and remembles very much another one that I know of with respect to Doctor Amador, which occurred at the commencing of the electoral campaign. He affirmed to various persons that Dr. Belisario Porras at one time offered him his assistance toward his reelection of the country? You can give no sufficient reasons in support of your idea.

These gratuitous and offensive conjectures regarding the good name of the personnel of the present government furnish the proof of political hostility which your party is showing in the discussion of this matter, and I find in it a revelation of the inexperience and ignorance of those who suddenly find themselves perchance for the first time in the camp of the opposition. When we were the opposing party, we never made a charge that we could not substantiate in regard to the actions of those who were in power. You wish to condemn us for actions that are not ours, and content yourselves with the conjectures and suggestions of envy and with gratuitous incrimination. You do not see how advantageous is the position of those who have just taken over the government, with unblemished records and an honorable past, which constitutes their best defense.

I should not end this without treating, at least briefly, on the allusion Doctor Amador makes in his above letter regarding me.

It is true in the first haif of the year just past Messrs. Harvey, Drake, and Whitley desired to know the opinion of an attorney of Panama with respect to the legal possibility of the matter of the timber and solicited mine when I was a simple individual, which I gave in the form that you and the other readers of the Diario will find in another place in to-day's issue.

It will be clearly seen that in giving my opinion I was guided by you and the other readers of to-day's issue.

It will be clearly seen that in giving my opinion I was guided by my knowledge of the laws of geography, not less than my duty and by my desire as a Panamanian to bring the greatest benefit to the country. Since that time I have had no connection with those interested operation.

my desire as a Panamanian to bring the greatest benefit to the country. Since that time I have had no connection with those interested in this business.

As a member of the Government, I favor the projected operation, because I think it advantageous for the country, and because I am inspired by the natural zeal of the administration, of which I form a part, to free itself from the sin of indolence which I attribute to the past administration, in all things related to the progress of our Republic.

Pardon me, esteemed gentlemen, for the unwarranted length of this letter, and accept the assurance of my sincere appreciation and consideration. I am,
Yours, truly,

THE PROPOSED RAILWAY CONTRACT.

ARTICLE 1.

The following agreement and contract is, this day and date, made and entered into by and between the Government of the Republic of Panama and Randolph G. Ward, of the city and State of New York, United States of America, for himself, his associates, heirs, or assigns; and it is mutually agreed and understood that the rights, privileges, and benefits granted and acquired by the terms and conditions of this contract shall not be transferred or assigned to any foreign government.

ARTICLE 2.

The Intercontinental Railway shall be located between the cities of Panama and David, substantially along the route surveyed for the International Pan-American Railroad. The total length of the line from Panama to David, as determined by surveys made under the direction of the International Railway Commission, is given as 441.59 kilometers. For the purposes of this contract, however, it is estimated and agreed that a line can and shall be located between the two cities mentioned, which shall have lighter grades and easier curves than those contemplated in the surveys made for the International Rallway referred to, and that such line shall not exceed 450 kilometers in length. It is further agreed that the surveys for this line, as completed, in sections of not less than 50 kilometers, shall be submitted to and approved by the authorized officer or officers of the Government of the Republic of Panama before construction shall be commenced on such line.

12,500

ARTICLE 3.

The Intercontinental Railway, in order that it may constitute and become a link in an ultimately complete chain of railways providing continuous and uninterrupted service from Panama through Central America and Mexico to the United States and Canada, shall be of "standard gauge" (4 feet 8½ inches) and laid with 56-pound steel rails upon imported pine, cypress, or redwood cross-ties, which cross-ties, when renewed, shall be replaced with native hardwood cross-ties. The cuts, fills, bridges, culverts, shops, stations, motive power and other equipment shall be of a character, capacity, and quality fully up to the standard of railroads built and operated under substantially similar circumstances throughout the United States, Canada, and Mexico; and it is mutually understood and agreed that during construction and thereafter when in operation at least 50 per cent of the number of employees on the Intercontinental Railway shall be citizens of the Republic of Panama, unless after diligent effort and public advertisement it shall be found to be impossible to obtain so large a proportion qualified and willing to perform the services required.

ARTICLE 4.

ARTICLE 4.

The standard gold dollar of the United States is the unit of value referred to and employed in this contract. The permanent ownership by railway corporations of lands other than such as may be strictly necessary for transportation and terminal purposes is mutually recognized as wrong in principle and an unwise policy. Therefore, subscribing to this theory, it is understood and agreed that the surplus lands mentioned in articles 13 and 14 of this contract shall be disposed of absolutely as soon as it shall be practicable and advantageous to do so in the manner and for the purposes stated in said articles.

ARTICLE 5.

To provide the necessary capital with which to construct, equip, and put into operation the Intercontinental Railway, in accordance with the terms and stipulations of this contract, Randolph G. Ward, for himself, his associates, heirs, or assigns, agrees to organize, under the laws of the State of New Jersey, United States of America, a stock company, which stock company shall be known as the "Intercontinental Railway Company." The capitalization of said railway company shall consist of common stock, in amount equivalent to $7,500 per kilometer of railroad built, and 5 per cent noncumulative preferred stock, retirable at par, in amount equivalent also to $7,500 per kilometer of railroad built; also, first-mortgage bonds, in amount equivalent to $20,000 per kilometer of railroad built; such bonds to run for a period of fifty years, and to bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually. These first-mortgage bonds shall be divided into two classes, to be known as class "A" and class "B," respectively. Bonds of class A shall be issued in amount equivalent to $7,500 per kilometer, and bonds of class B shall be issued in amount equivalent to $12,500 per kilometer of railroad built.

Capitalization recapitulated and explained.

ARTICLE 6.

Forty-nine per cent of the common stock of the Intercontinental Railway Company shall be delivered to the Government of the Republic of Panama, for and in consideration of the rights, privileges, exemptions, guaranties, and concessions granted and contained in this contract. The remaining 51 per cent of such common stock, together with the entire issue of preferred stock, and of first mortgage bonds shall be retained by Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, as consideration for services rendered and capital required and provided to construct, equip, and put into operation the Intercontinental Railway, according to the stipulations of this contract.

ARTICLE 7.

Subject to the terms and conditions specified in this contract, the Government of the Republic of Panama grants to Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, the right to construct, equip, and operate the Intercontinental Railway during a period of ninety-nine years from the date of the approval of this contract; at the expiration of which period of time the 51 per cent of the common stock of the Intercontinental Railway Company, held by said Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, shall be delivered to and become the property of the Government of the Republic of Panama, without further compensation or consideration. And it is mutually understood and agreed that the Government of the Republic of Panama shall have the right, at any time after fifty years from the date of this contract, to acquire by purchase and at a fair valuation the 51 per cent of said common stock held by said Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns; or, by adding 25 per cent to the amount of such fair valuation, the Government of the Republic of Panama shall have the right to acquire such common stock at any time after the expiration of twenty-five years from the date of this contract; and, finally, by paying its face or par value, the Government of the Republic of Panama shall have the right to acquire such common stock at any time after ten years following the date of this contract.

ARTICLE 8.

ARTICLE 8.

ARTICLE 8.

It is mutually understood and agreed that the annual earnings of the Intercontinental Railway, when completed and put into operation, shall be disbursed for the following purposes and in the order specified:

First. The payment of all expenses of operation, including maintenance of the property.

Second. The payment into a sinking fund of an amount equivalent to 1 per cent upon the principal of any and all outstanding unpaid firstmortgage bonds.

Third. The payment of the interest due upon any and all outstanding class A firstmortgage bonds.

Fourth. The payment of the interest due upon any and all outstanding class B first-mortgage bonds.

Fifth. The payment, when earned, of the 5 per cent noncumulative dividend upon any and all outstanding preferred stock.

Sixth. The payment of dividends upon the common stock.

ARTICLE 9.

The Government of the Republic of Panama authorizes the issue of first-mortgage bonds upon the franchise and property of the Intercontinental Railway, as determined by the stipulations of this contract, to the amount, for the term of years, at the rate of interests, and in the classes specified in article 5; and it appropriates such portion of the revenues of the Republic derived from its constitutionally invested capital (see art. 138 of the constitution of the Republic of Panama) and to be derived from the annual rental payable by the Government of the United States on account of the Panama Canal (see art. 15 of the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty) as may be necessary to secure and guarantee the payment of interest upon the class "B" subdivision of such first-mortgage bonds in amount equivalent to $12,500 per kilometer of raifroad built. The Government of the Republic of Panama does not, however, guarantee the payment of interest upon the class "A" subdivision of first-mortgage bonds authorized, but it recognizes the priority given to such bonds in the disbursement of the annual revenues of the Intercontinental Railway as specified in article 8.

ARTICLE 10.

ARTICLE 10.

The entire issue of first-mortgage bonds provided for in article 5 shall be emitted upon one and the same date, and each of the class B bonds shall bear on its face the guaranty of the Government of the Republic of Panama stipulated in article 9 of this contract. The first-mortgage bonds of both classes, when executed by the proper officers of the Intercontinental Railway Company and indorsed by the proper officers of the Government of the Republic of Panama, respectively, shall be deposited with a responsible trust company in the city of New York, United States of America, by which trust company they shall be delivered to the said Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, in proportion as the work of constructing and equipping the Intercontinental Railway shall progress, such deliveries being made upon orders drawn by the proper officers of the Intercontinental Railway Company and approved by the proper officers of the Government of the Republic of Panama. It is, however, understood and agreed that all past due interest coupons attached to such bonds at the time of such delivery or deliveries shall be detached and canceled by said trust company.

ARTICLE 11.

The Government of the Republic of Panama grants to Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, the necessary right of way over all public lands and highways, and agrees to expropriate for account of the Intercontinental Railway Company any and all right of way that may be required over private property for the building of the Intercontinental Railway. It also grants and agrees to expropriate, as the case may require, all public and private lands that may be necessary for the building of stations, shops, and terminals required by said railway.

ARTICLE 19

The Government of the Republic of Panama agrees that, during the life of this contract, all materials required for the construction, maintenance, or operation of the Intercontinental Railway shall be imported free of duty, and that no tax—national, provincial, or municipal—shall be imposed upon any property belonging to the Intercontinental Railway Company, or upon any of the stocks, bonds, or other securities issued by such company, or upon any negotiation or transaction that may be necessary and essential to the construction, equipment, maintenance, or operation of such railway. It is, however, understood and agreed that the exemptions contained in this article shall not apply to any property, stock, bond, security, negotiation, or transaction that shall be other than strictly necessary and essential to such purposes. And it is especially agreed that these exemptions do not apply to any of the lands mentioned in articles 13 and 14, except such as may come to be used for railway or terminal purposes, as provided, nor to commissary supplies of any kind or description, which commissary supplies, it is mutually stipulated, shall, when required, be purchased in the local market.

ARTICLE 13.

In order to make it possible to locate and establish suitable railroad

In order to make it possible to locate and establish suitable railroad and maritime terminals for the Intercontinental Railway, which shall be within the limits and in the Immediate vicinity of the city of Panama, the Government of the Republic of Panama grants to Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, all those alternately submerged and flooded lands lying between the high-water and low-water levels, and extending outward from the northeast bastion of the city of Panama southward and westward, along the present boundaries of the city, to an intersection with the boundary of the Canal Zone at the extremity of a point of land projecting out into the sea in the direction of a small island; together with the right to reclaim, occupy, and possess such lands in the manner, for the purposes, and subject to the conditions herein stipulated. It is understood and agreed that these lands shall be surrounded by suitable dikes, or retaining walls, and filled in to a safe level above high-water mark; that there shall be located thereon the raliroad and maritime terminals herein referred to, which shall include ample yards and well-equipped shops for raliway and marine purposes; a dry dock and a marine raliway for cleaning and repairing coasting steamers and other seagoing craft; and deep-water docks for maritime commercial uses, of the type known as "wet docks," such as are employed at Liverpool, at Cardiff, and at Havre, where the rise and fall of tide is approximately the same as at Panama. It is understood and agreed that these "wet docks" shall be of a size, depth, and capacity calculated to meet the commercial requirements of the port of Panama in such manner as to render it independent of all other ports; and that they shall be designed and equipped with special reference to the facilitation of national and international construse trade, including the erection of a coaling station—and of warehouses of ample capacity to accommodate such trade. It is also understood and agreed that the proceeds resulting from the sale, rental, or other disposition of the lands thus reclaimed, together with the net revenues to be derived from the operation of the terminal facilities and improvements specified in this article, shall be applied to the repayment of the costs of reclaiming such lands and executing such works, until such costs shall have been fully repaid and extinguished; and thereafter, should there remain any balance in excess of such costs, then such balance is to be applied to the payment of the interest upon the class "A" first-mortgage bonds. It is further understood and agreed that surveys and plans locating and illustrating the works and terminal improvements herein specified, and also showing the manner of laying out and developing, into an annex or extension of the city of Panama, such lands as may not be required for s

Intercontinental Railway to construct a tunnel under and across the city of Panama to facilitate and accomplish such purposes.

ARTICLE 14.

Adopting the methods wisely and usually employed by other American governments in promoting the construction of railroads for the development of the natural resources and industrial and commercial possibilities of their respective countries, and, as an inducement to capitalists to provide the necessary funds with which to construct, equip, and put into operation the Intercontinental Railway the Government of the Republic of Panama grants to Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, public lands, in amount equivalent to 1,000 hectares per kilometer of railroad to be built in accordance with the terms and stipulations of this contract, which lands shall be located in that section of the Republic of Panama which lies enstward of the Canal Zone, and, in a general way, along the route of and more or less adjacent to the line of surveys provided for in article 21. It is understood and agreed that the lands mentioned in this article are granted subject to all the terms and conditions prescribed by the laws of the Republic of Panama relating to the disposition of public lands, except that no consideration shall be paid therefor other than the consideration specified in article 6, and implied in the terms and conditions of this contract. It is further understood and agreed that the proceeds resulting from the sale, rental, or other disposition of the lands mentioned in this article 8 and created to provide for the repayment of the principal of the first-mortgage bonds of the Intercontinental Railway Company specified in and authorized by the terms and conditions of this contract.

ARTICLE 15.

To facilitate the business of constructing, equipping, and operating the Intercontinental Rallway, the Government of the Republic of Panama grants to Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, the free use of the national mails and telegraph lines.

ARTICLE 16.

ARTICLE 16.

It is mutually understood and agreed that during the life of this contract all public mails shall be transported over the lines of the Intercontinental Railway free of charge to the Government of the Republic of Panama; and further, that all national, provincial, and municipal officials, traveling in the performance of their proper and legitimate duties, shall be entitled to free transportation over the lines of the Intercontinental Railway, when completed and put into operation for public service. To protect the Government of the Republic of Panama, and also Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, as joint stockholders in the Intercontinental Railway, according to the terms of article 6, against a possible abuse of the right of free transportation stipulated in the article, it is mutually agreed that the Government of the Republic shall furnish annually to the Intercontinental Railway Company a list of such officials entitled to such transportation.

ARTICLE 17.

ARTICLE 17.

The principal office of the Intercontinental Railway Company shall be located in the city of New York, United States of America, but the general operating office of the company shall be located in the city of Panama, Republic of Panama, or at some other more suitable and convenient point on the line of the Intercontinental Railway itself; and at all times there shall be located within the Republic of Panama an officer of the Intercontinental Railway Company having full power of attorney to transact any business that may be required of the railway.

ARTICLE 18.

The business of the Intercontinental Railway shall be conducted by a board of directors consisting of 7 members, 3 of whom shall be appointed by the Government of the Republic of Panama, and 4 of whom shall be elected by the holders of the 51 per cent of the common stock of that company retained by Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns.

ARTICLE 19.

It is agreed by Randolph G. Ward, for himself, his associates, heirs, or assigns, that the Intercontinental Railway Company shall be organized within three months; that the surveys of the Intercontinental Railway shall be begun within six months and completed within eighteen months; and that the construction and equipment of such railway shall be begun within one year and completed within four years from the date of the approval of this contract. And as evidence of his ability to comply with the stipulations contained in this article and in all other articles of this contract, except as to article 13, the penalty for failure to comply with which is therein stipulated, the said Randolph G. Ward, for himself, his associates, heirs, or assigns, agrees, within three months from the date of the approval of this contract, to file with the Government of the Republic of Panama a bond in the sum of $100,000, such bond to be issued by a responsible and reliable bonding company of the United States or to be indorsed by such individual sureties as shall be satisfactory to the Government of the Republic of Panama, it being understood and mutually agreed that such bond or such sureties once given and accepted, this contract shall become binding upon both parties hereto subscribing.

ARTICLE 20.

ARTICLE 20.

It is mutually understood and agreed that should Randolph G. Ward, for himself, his associates, heirs, or assigns, fail to comply with any one of the stipulations specified in article 19, then this contract shall become null and void in so far as it shall relate to the said Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, and the bond referred to in article 19 and given by said Randolph G. Ward, for himself, his associates, heirs, or assigns, as a guaranty for his and their ability to comply with the stipulations contained in this contract, shall become forfeited and shall be paid over to the Government of the Republic of Panama; and in such event, should such stock have been issued, the 51 percent of the common stock of the Intercontinental Railway Company, held by the said Randolph G. Ward, his associates, heirs, or assigns, shall also be delivered to the Government of the Republic of Panama without any compensation or consideration whatsoever. The cancellation of this contract under such circumstances shall not, however, be permitted to operate to the detriment of the rights of third and innocent parties who, acting in good faith and under authority of the Government of the Republic of Panama, shall have become possessed of any of the first-mortgage bonds or preferred stock of the Intercontinental Railway Company, or of any of the lands referred to in articles 13 and 14 of this contract.

ARTICLE 21.

Finally, it is mutually understood and agreed that, terms and conditions being fair and equal, the Intercontinental Railway Company shall have preference in the extension of its line westward from the city of David to the boundaries of the Republic of Costa Rica, and eastward from the city of Panama to the boundaries of the Republic of Colombia, including also the right to construct branch lines southward into the peninsula of Veraguas, and elsewhere, as found necessary or desirable; and the Government of the Republic of Panama hereby authorizes Randolph G. Ward, for himself, his associates, heirs, or assigns, to make such surveys as may be necessary to develop the railway possibilities and requirements of the eastern section of the Republic, and which may be essential to locate the lands granted in article 14, and hereby appropriates a sum not to exceed $100,000 to defray the cost and expenses of such surveys, it being understood that such surveys, when completed, shall be the property of the Government of the Republic of Panama. It is, however, agreed that the Intercontinental Railway Company shall repay the cost of these surveys should the extension of the Intercontinental Railway eastward of Panama be hereafter authorized.

Article 138 of the constitution of the Republic of Panama:

"In order to guarantee to posterity a part of the pecuniary benefits derived from the negotiation for the opening of the interoceanic canal, the sum of $6,000,000 is to be reserved which will be inverted (invested) into securities producing a fixed annual revenue. The law will regulate this inversion."

Article 14 of the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty:

"As the price or compensation for the rights, powers, and privileges granted in this convention by the Republic of Panama to the United States, the Government of the United States agrees to pay to the Republic of Panama the sum of $10,000,000 in gold coin of the United States on the exchange of the ratification of this convention; and also an annual payment during the life of this convention (which is perpetual) of $250,000 in like gold coin, beginning nine years after the date (December 2, 1903) aforesaid."

REMARKS.

The above is submitted as the draft of a contract believed to be mutually advantageous to the Government of the Republic of Panama and to the undersigned, his associates, heirs, or assigns. Under this arrangement, should the line reach the full limit of 450 kilometers in length, prescribed in article 2, the maximum liability of the Government in any one year would amount to only $253,125; which would be considerably less than the sum of the revenues derived by the Republic of Panama from its constitutionally invested capital alone. Assuming, however, that the line when completed shall not exceed 440 kilometers in length, the maximum liability of the Government in any one year would amount to only $247,500: which would be less than the amount of the annual revenue alone that will be received by the Republic of Iranama from the United States on account of the rental of the Panama Canal.

The actual annual liability of the Government of the Republic of Panama, under the terms and conditions of the above proposed contract, is estimated as follows, calculating from the date of the approval of such contract:

For the first year
For the second year
For the third year
For the fourth, fifth and sixth years

Hon. Henry T. Rainey,
United States House of Representatives.

Dear Sir: In further reply to your letter of January 11:
I take pleasure in inclosing a memorandum in regard to the forest resources of Panama and the qualities and uses of some of the woods that are found there. I regret that I am unable to furnish you with more comprehensive information on this subject and also that the Forest Service files contain no data in regard to the amount of forested land in Panama that is still public land. In regard to the latter point, Mr. John Barrett, Director of the International Bureau of American Republics, or the ambassador from Panama may be able to give you just the information you desire.

Very truly, yours,

Overton W. Price,
Associate Forester.
